Jackie Moon is one-hit wonder who used the profits from the success of his chart-topping song "Love Me Sexy" to achieve his dream of owning a basketball team. But Moon's franchise, the Flint Mich., is the worst team in the league and in danger of folding when the ABA announces its plans to merge with the NBA. If they want to survive, Jackie and the Tropics must now do the seemingly impossible — win.

HPV most-common STI/STD among college-age women

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite a national increase in reported cases of chlamydia, gonorrhea and syphilis to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the most common sexually transmitted infection among young people is human papillomavirus, or HPV.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotions and nutrition counseling at Lafene Health Center, said the probability of a college-age adult having an STD has increased within the last 10 years.

In fact, according to the American Social Health Association, "about half of all new STD's/STI's in 2000 occurred among youth ages 15 to 24. The total estimated costs of these 9 million new cases of these STDs/STIs was $6.5 billion, with HIV and human papillomavirus (HPV) accounting for 90 percent of the total burden."

Unlike chlamydia, gonorrhea and syphilis, the nation's three most screened STD's, HPV and genital herpes are not screened and go unreported to the CDC, according to its Web site. Testing for HPV must be requested during a physical exam.

Kennedy said many students don't seek treatment after infection because the infection itself is asymptomatic.

"Part of the problem is that many people don't have symptoms, and so they don't get treated," Kennedy said, "thus spreading it to others. HPV is more prevalent in women than in men."

Because of a lack of symptoms, the new term "sexually transmitted infection," or STI, is used in reference to a person who is infected and could possibly infect others, according to the World Health Organization. In many cases, STI's are curable.

Gardasil is a new vaccine to prevent certain types of HPV. However, while there are about 40 types of HPV, the vaccine helps to prevent only four types of HPV with which a woman has not been exposed.

"There are two types of HPV, which cause 70 percent of cervical cancer cases," Kennedy said. "The two most common types create 90 percent of the cases of genital warts."

The vaccine is administered completely in three sessions; however, Kennedy said the vaccine is most effective before any sexual contact.

"It works best before any genital skin-to-skin contact, not just before a person has intercourse," she said.

According to the CDC Web site the vaccine is recommended for girls 11- to 13-years-old but can be administered to girls as young as 9 years old.

Traci Glosser, freshman in accounting, said she received the vaccine when she was in high school.

"Some of my friends were getting it when it first came to my hospital in my hometown," she said, "and my doctor just recommended it at my physical for extra safety."

Though she has received the vaccine, Glosser said she didn't know much about HPV until she got the vaccine.

HPV is a common virus worldwide that causes genital warts and is the major cause of cervical cancer among women. There is no clinically approved way to detect HPV in men; visual inspections for warts are most common, according to ASHA.

Depending on the location of the wart, condoms might not be effective, Kennedy said.

"It's important to know your partner, even get tested together," she said.

Using condoms every time as well as limiting your partners is another suggestion she offered.

"Don't have sex with a different person every weekend," Kennedy said.

She said drugs and alcohol can impair decision-making skills, and abuse of either should be avoided.

"Don't put yourself in a position to make a decision to do something that you wouldn't normally do," Kennedy said.

There are many resources about HPV according to ASHA, yet Kennedy said people are more aware of how to prevent a pregnancy than an STD.

Librarian adds to culture with films, collections

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When one of the most popular Brazilian reggae groups toured the United States, they made one unexpected stop — Manhattan, Kan. Rhondalyn Peairs, director of the DOW Chemical Multicultural Resource Center, spearheaded the effort to bring the band AfroReggae.

"We were showing the film 'Favela Rising' and then the band that was actually in the film came to K-State," Peairs said. "But it was just one of those golden opportunities. They just happened to be in the country at the time."

Peairs started the campaign to raise about $1,300 to bring the band. Peairs said she thought the band was impressive.

"If people didn't know about the movie or hadn't heard about them, it was amazing to see people's reactions after they had just seen the band jumping around on stage," she said.

These types of responses are what the film series Movies on the Grass tries to explain, Peairs said.

Several factors contributed to the creation of Movies on the Grass in fall 2005. The core groups of people, who had been talking all over campus, came together to try a unified film series, Peairs said. The group decided that fall was the best time to screen a film outside.

"Most of our movies are documentaries and independent movies and they are not generally going to be shown at Carmike," she said. "One thing about Movies on the Grass is it's organic; it's always morphing itself."

For the fall 2008 season, Peairs said they are planning to show a movie based on the presidential election. Also, she said they want to show something about women's issues.

"Movies on the Grass is a gentle and comfortable way to make people deal with difficult issues," she said. "Every year we add pre-film entertainment, and we always have a discussion following the film."

Along with her involvement with Movies on the Grass, Peairs has a more traditional library task as cultural studies librarian.

"I love making decisions that will get resources that will actually benefit students," she said. "I bring in a lot of information people don't even know is out there."

Peairs said she goes beyond major publishing vendors to find cultural studies material.

Since 9/11, more people have been requesting information on Arab descent. Peairs said she used vendors who sold information only to the community. Also, she has been finding texts from a small Canadian press owned by an American Indian.

"I found myself digging into the one person who is peddling their one video tape to fill in the gaps with our collection," she said. "When I selected the book that meets informational needs, it gives you sort of a rush in a geeky sort of way."

Down, but not out

Despite shaky poll numbers, Hillary should continue

To the delight of some and the chagrin of others, the presidential campaign of Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., is starting to look spookily similar to the K-State men's basketball season this year.

Both factions began their seasons with promising key victories – for example, Clinton's win in New Hampshire and K-State's brilliant triumph over the University of Kansas. Now, however, after suffering several devastating losses, they are both scrambling to pick up some wins just to stay alive. But while the men's basketball team valiantly presses on with the help of its loyal fans, some of Clinton's supporters are starting to have second thoughts. In fact, a few are even suggesting she withdraw from the race.

"If Hillary Clinton wanted a graceful exit, she'd drop out now – before the March 4 Texas and Ohio primaries – and endorse Barack Obama, D-Ill.," wrote columnist Jonathan Alter in an issue of Newsweek which will hit newsstands Monday and is now available on the magazine's Web site.

In his column, Alter claimed that Clinton would have to win both Texas and Ohio by a very wide margin to stay competitive in the race. Alter said since there's no chance this will happen, it would be a wise and classy move for Clinton to quit now.

Well, Alter is right about something – chances aren't looking good for Clinton. The two candidates are virtually deadlocked in Texas. A Feb. 25 USA Today/Gallup poll even put Obama ahead by a few points, at 49 percent to Clinton's 45 percent.

Fortunately for her, Clinton still has the lead in Ohio, her last real bastion of strength. But Obama is closing the gap faster than the K-State men's basketball team lost its No. 1 spot in the Big 12 Conference.

In a Rasmussen Reports poll released on Feb. 26, Clinton led in her "fire-wall" state by just five points, 48 percent to Obama's 43 percent. Two weeks ago, she led by nearly triple that margin. Clinton's last defenses are crumbling, and it seems like nothing can stop Obama from breaking through.

But despite such confidence-crushing numbers, it would be absurd for Clinton to abandon the race before the March 4 primaries. Why would she drop out before the voters in Texas and Ohio had a chance to make their decisions? Though the polls usually are accurate, they're hardly infallible – just look at New Hampshire. Hillary could make a last-minute rally in one or both states and gather just enough votes to stay alive.

As for Alter's suggestion: leaving the race now to avoid humiliation would not be classy – it would be a slap in the face to everyone who has supported her throughout this roller-coaster campaign season. Sure, there's honor in humbly accepting defeat, but it is no less honorable to fight it out to the end.

Naturally, Clinton would have every reason to step down if she lost Texas and Ohio so soundly that her nomination would become a mathematical impossibility. But while she still has even the slightest hope of winning the nomination, it would be mad to call it quits.

Of course, most of these election woes will remain shrouded in doubt until March 4. Whether Clinton will stick around for the next round of primaries will be in the hands of voters in Texas and Ohio. We can, however, be fairly certain Clinton will stick it out until then. In fact, the day she decides to bow out of the race while she still has a chance of winning will be the day our men's basketball team decides to forfeit one of its games.

Now, if only Clinton could round up a campaign manager who is to politics what Michael Beasley is to basketball.

FEEDBACK

Collegian answers Fourum

Starting this Friday, the To The Point column will feature the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected comments.

–Boyfriend wanted: country boy, taller than 5'10," more than 150 pounds, square jawline, straight teeth, dark, curly hair, boots, Wranglers with a firm butt, strong arms, drinks a lot of beer, deep voice, sexy and not a virgin. All candidates, reply with name in the Fourum.

To the single woman looking for a boyfriend, don't worry: you are in Kansas and we are sure you can find a real wrangler here. Be sure to check out Longhorns on a Saturday night, but steer away from Kite's and Silverado's because they attract a different crowd.

–Manhattan is reminding me of the movie "The Birds" right now.

Seriously, what is with all the birds flying around the rec and the Veterinary Medicine Hospital? We agree Manhattan does look like the movie "The Birds." We can only hope these birds fly away home and don't start pecking people to death.

–So Fourum, I want to know why you never publish any of my drunken texts. They're quite creative.

As much as we would like to publish your drunk texts, it's out of our capabilities. You see, the Fourum's number cannot receive text messages. Even though we are sure the text messages are creative, we wonder at what time would we be receiving these messages? 2 a.m., perhaps?

Reaching for a 'doll' doesn't solve everybody's problems

Have a headache? Grab an Advil. Or maybe it's best to be safe and reach for the extra-strength Excedrin.

Depressed? Constipated? Sleepless? Anxious? No worries, just reach for a pill, say the drug lords, or rather, doctors of the United States.

Our nation is turning into a live-action version of "Valley of the Dolls." Doll, which is slang for downers or mood-altering pills, is the operative word here. Each character in this movie has her own special "doll" for her own problem. Have a problem? Just grab a doll.

There is a creepy parallel between this movie and what our society is becoming. Work all day – and night – take sleeping pills, antidepressants and anti-anxiety meds to balance us out amid the never-ending grind.

"Valley of the Dolls" follows three women as their careers and aspirations carry them to the pinnacle of their lives. The only catch is, in order to stay at the top of their game, they have to take pills to sleep, wake up and maintain a balanced character.

According to an NBC report, the No. 1 type of medicine prescribed to American women is anti-depressants. Thirty-seven percent of women aged 18-44 are taking these mood-altering drugs, according to the report.

According to an ABC news story, prescriptions for antidepressants have increased to an astounding 118 million each year, which amount to roughly one prescription per two-and-a-half Americans.

For some, these medications work miracles and keep people from committing violent acts of self-mutilation or at least help them stand to wake up every day and live the lives they have.

But what if suddenly these drugs became less effective? What if the top-of-the-line options to relieve depression and anxiety didn't work? According to BBC News, that's exactly what's happening.

A group from the University of Hull concluded that the newest generation of antidepressant drugs is only beneficial to the most severely depressed, which is a rather small group, according to the BBC. There's a catch to everything.

While plenty of patients suffering from depression have admitted pills aren't for them, our culture is all too driven by quick fixes. It's rare for people to wait out a migraine or shrug off indigestion, and why should they, when the advertising and pharmaceutical industries are enticing them with an answer, or pill, for every ache and pain?

Well, it wasn't just a myth that said all good things come to an end.

According to ABC News, Blair Johnson, psychology professor at the University of Connecticut, said cases involving lower levels of depression showed very little to no improvement from antidepressants.

"My theory is that human beings are very suggestible creatures," Johnson said in an article. "The patient who takes these drugs then might, in believing they feel better, start to act in a way that actually makes them feel better. Consequently you have almost as big an effect for placebo as you do for drugs."

If said wonder drugs practically are developing into less-effective sugar pills, then perhaps other methods of treatment should be sought in the first place.

Not to say there aren't a fair amount of people out there who truly can benefit from antidepressant medicines, but there's also a decent number of us who rely on drugs to solve our everyday blues.

As many experts have said, get some fresh air, talk with friends, seek counseling and get second, third and fourth opinions before immediately falling victim to pills.

KU law professor to discuss Kansas judicial nominating issues at lunch

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People hungry for information can listen to an advocate discuss changes needed in the Kansas judicial system today while feeding their stomachs.

Stephen Ware, a professor of law at the University of Kansas, will speak at noon today at Sirloin Stockade, 325 E. Poyntz Ave., to the public and members of the local Americans for Prosperity chapter.

Ware will speak about the selection of Kansas Supreme Court justices.

Jennifer Rezac, communications director for Americans for Prosperity-Kansas, said the luncheon will inform the attendees about how Kansas currently selects its justices and to show that there are better ways to do it.

"People will mingle and eat for a little bit, and then he'll speak and open it up for questions at the end," she said.

In November, Ware published "Selection to the Kansas Supreme Court," and Rezac said he will speak about a different system to select Kansas justices, which he advocates as requiring Senate confirmation of Kansas Supreme Court justices.

Rezac said the event is open to the public, though attendees will need to pay for their own lunch.

"It's informal, and it's something we want people to feel comfortable at," Rezac said. "We've had it at various types of places and a lot of restaurants."

According to a Jan. 9 article in the Lawrence Journal-World, Ware has been giving policy receptions around the state since the beginning of the year.

The article reported that Ware discusses the benefits of changing the current system to where "the governor would nominate a candidate, whose appointment would then be subject to confirmation by the state Senate — similar to the process used by the federal government in selecting federal judges."

Paul Barkey, Manhattan

coordinator for the local AFP chapter, said this is the first time Ware will speak to the Manhattan chapter.

He said the members listen to speakers about economic or political issues every three or four months during lunch or with appetizers in the evening.

Barkey said he expects about 20 to 50 people at the event, which he said will last an hour.

"We'll eat lunch and have some stimulating input," Barkey said.

While Manhattan AFP members will attend the event, Barkey said he hopes the Manhattan general public also will come to the open meeting.

"We hope that there will be people particularly interested in this topic and concerned about what's going on in the judicial system, particularly the control the judicial system is exercising in our culture," he said.

Barkey said the mission of AFP is to help the state of Kansas, as well as the United States, move ahead as a culture and commit to economically sound practices to remain stable.

Worker upholds tale of theater ghost

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tales of ghosts and apparitions on the east side of Memorial Stadium have been told by K-State students for years. Stories tell of at least one ghost, Nick, a student who died on campus and now haunts the building.

Sally Bailey, associate professor of theater, has worked in the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium for eight years. Theatergoers and drama students who frequent the Purple Masque often are present when Nick chooses to interact with the living.

"Supposedly, [Nick] was killed in a football game in the stadium many, many years ago when the old stadium was used for football games, and also used as the dorm for the athletes," Bailey said. "What is now the Purple Masque was the cafeteria."

Bailey said Nick's ghost has stayed in Memorial Stadium all these years because he is still waiting for his parents, who were not with him before he died.

"He was carried in from the field to the cafeteria and that's where he died," she said. "It is believed he still haunts the Purple Masque. ... Legend says they were on their way to the game, but it was a dark and rainy night and they had an accident on a country road and were killed, never making it to see Nick."

Nick is known as a prankster, and Bailey said she believes several strange occurrences can be attributed to his mischief.

"My first couple of years of teaching, there were a couple of times when I thought that my purse had disappeared, and then at the end of class or the end of rehearsal, it would show up back where I had originally put it," Bailey said. "I decided that Nick was spitting it away just to let me know he was around and that I'd better be respectful."

Bailey teaches Creative Drama in the Purple Masque each semester. She said by telling Nick's story out loud to her students during class, Nick feels that he is being remembered and keeps a low profile.

"I think that he feels we are keeping his name alive and respecting his memory, so he doesn't feel the need to play tricks on me and my students," Bailey said.

Fort Riley soldiers, families face lack of housing options in Flint Hills region

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Affordable housing can be difficult to find for soldiers new to Fort Riley because of the long wait for on-post housing.

When Craig Wall was stationed at Fort Riley he brought his wife, Tara, and his daughter Elideday with him. He was told by non-commissioned officers at his military technical training school in Virginia he would be able to get on-post housing quickly, and he would be able to stay at the on-post motel cheaply until that housing was ready.

When the Walls arrived at Fort Riley, they found places to stay were not readily available, and there were no rooms available at the post motel. Because Craig was only a private second class and he and his wife didn't have any credit cards, their options were limited.

So, in the 110-degree heat of August, the Wall family camped at Tuttle Creek State Park. They camped for two weeks and five days before deciding they couldn't live that way anymore.

"We walked around Walmart all day long to get out of the heat," Tara said.

When they finally decided that they had had enough of camping, they went in search of an extended stay motel in Topeka. When they were just outside of Wamego, they were pulled over for speeding by a police officer. The officer gave them a warning, and he also gave them directions to a realtor in Wamego when he heard their story of looking for housing. The realtor then sent them to RW Properties in Wamego.

"We were lucky we were pulled over," Tara said.

Tara said they put their names on the housing list as soon as they got to post, but it was a six to 12 month wait for housing. She also said the list of possible places to look that the housing office gave them was discouraging. She said there were several places in Salina, Clay Center, Kan., and Topeka, but only a couple of places in Junction City and nothing for Manhattan or Wamego.

Many of the off-post housing options suggested to soldiers when they arrive don't meet Department of Defense standards in regards to commute and price, according to published guidelines. According to www.riley.army.mil, a soldier's commute should be no longer than 20 miles or less than an hour in rush hour traffic. Rent should be no more than 80 percent of soldiers' Basic Allowance for Housing.

When Craig came to Fort Riley, his BAH was $812. Before he found a place in Wamego, his family was going to rent a two-bedroom apartment in Junction City for $800 a month. They would have had to spend around $300 out of pocket for utilities. At the time Craig only made $2239.40 with BAH included before taxes. Luckily they found a two-bedroom apartment in Wamego for $575 a month.

The one drawback to living so far away from post is that the Walls were spending $300 a month in gas for their car.

The Walls' situation isn't unique among soldiers new to Fort Riley.

Fort Riley estimates there are 7,425 soldiers who live off-post, and they estimate 4,196 of those soldiers have family with them. Part of this difference is because of families that decided to leave Fort Riley or not come at all since their soldier was deployed in Iraq.

Tara is one of those spouses that decided to move back home while her husband toured in Iraq. She will be coming back to Fort Riley before her husband so she can move into on-post housing. When she moves sometime in July 2008, it will be almost two years since her husband came to Fort Riley.

Housing wait lists range from six months to 24 months depending upon rank and how many bedrooms are needed, according to the Fort Riley Housing waitlists. Based upon the projected expansion of Fort Riley's population, and the limited amount of space for future housing on Fort Riley, the surrounding area can expect 9,170 soldiers to live off post in 2013.

Less expensive and more readily available off-post housing in Junction City and Manhattan would help soldiers, but Tara said better resources for incoming soldiers are what are needed most.

"We had these expectations for what would happen when we got to Fort Riley," Tara said, "and none of them happened."

Sports will never eliminate cheating

It seems like every time you turn on SportsCenter today, you hear about people breaking the rules in sports.

We hear all about Roger Clemens being called to Congress to testify about whether he did or did not use performance-enhancing drugs.

Former Indiana coach Kelvin Sampson and his "impermissible calls" will forever leave a mark on college basketball.

Once, back in 1994, there was a nine-year-old girl in Hereford, Texas, playing T-ball a year after she was supposed to transition into slow-pitch softball.

That girl was me. Could I have been considered a ringer? With a little more athletic talent, yes.

However, the point I'm trying to prove is this: cheating is inevitable in sports. It might be intentional, or it might not, but it always will be a part of sports.

It also can make sports exciting. I'm sure everyone who followed baseball in 1998 remembers the home-run competition between Sammy Sosa and Mark McGwire.

McGuire was mentioned in the Jose Canseco expose, "Juiced," and Sosa was implicated in the Grimsley Affidavit, which came before the Mitchell Report was released.

Does the fact that both players most likely used performance-enhancing drugs take away from the excitement of watching every Cardinals' and Cubs' game that summer to see if it would be the game when Roger Maris' home-run record was broken?

To me it doesn't. The truth is, as sports fans, we flock to controversy. Watching the consequences of the Mitchell Report unfold, hearing about the gruesome attack on Nancy Kerrigan by one of Tonya Harding's henchmen, learning about juicing behind the scenes of the Tour de France — it's hard to find one sport in which some form of cheating has not left its mark.

Even casual fans of baseball know about the 1919 Chicago White Sox. "Shoelless" Joe Jackson and seven other players were banned from Major League Baseball for life for throwing games to make some extra cash that year.

In recent years, sports fans also brought up a big scandal on the big screen. In the remake of "The Longest Yard," Adam Sandler plays a quarterback who was implicated in point-shaving.

The film grossed $158 million domestically, proving once again that Americans like a good scandal (with some intense football scenes built in).

Sports and scandal go hand-in-hand. With all the competition in sports today, everyone always wants to be No. 1. The pressure is always on to be the best at everything — the national champions, the No. 1 draft pick, the captain of the team.

It's unfortunate that sometimes people are so desperate to be the best that they resort to cheating. Just because more and more people are getting caught doesn't mean the cheating is going to stop.

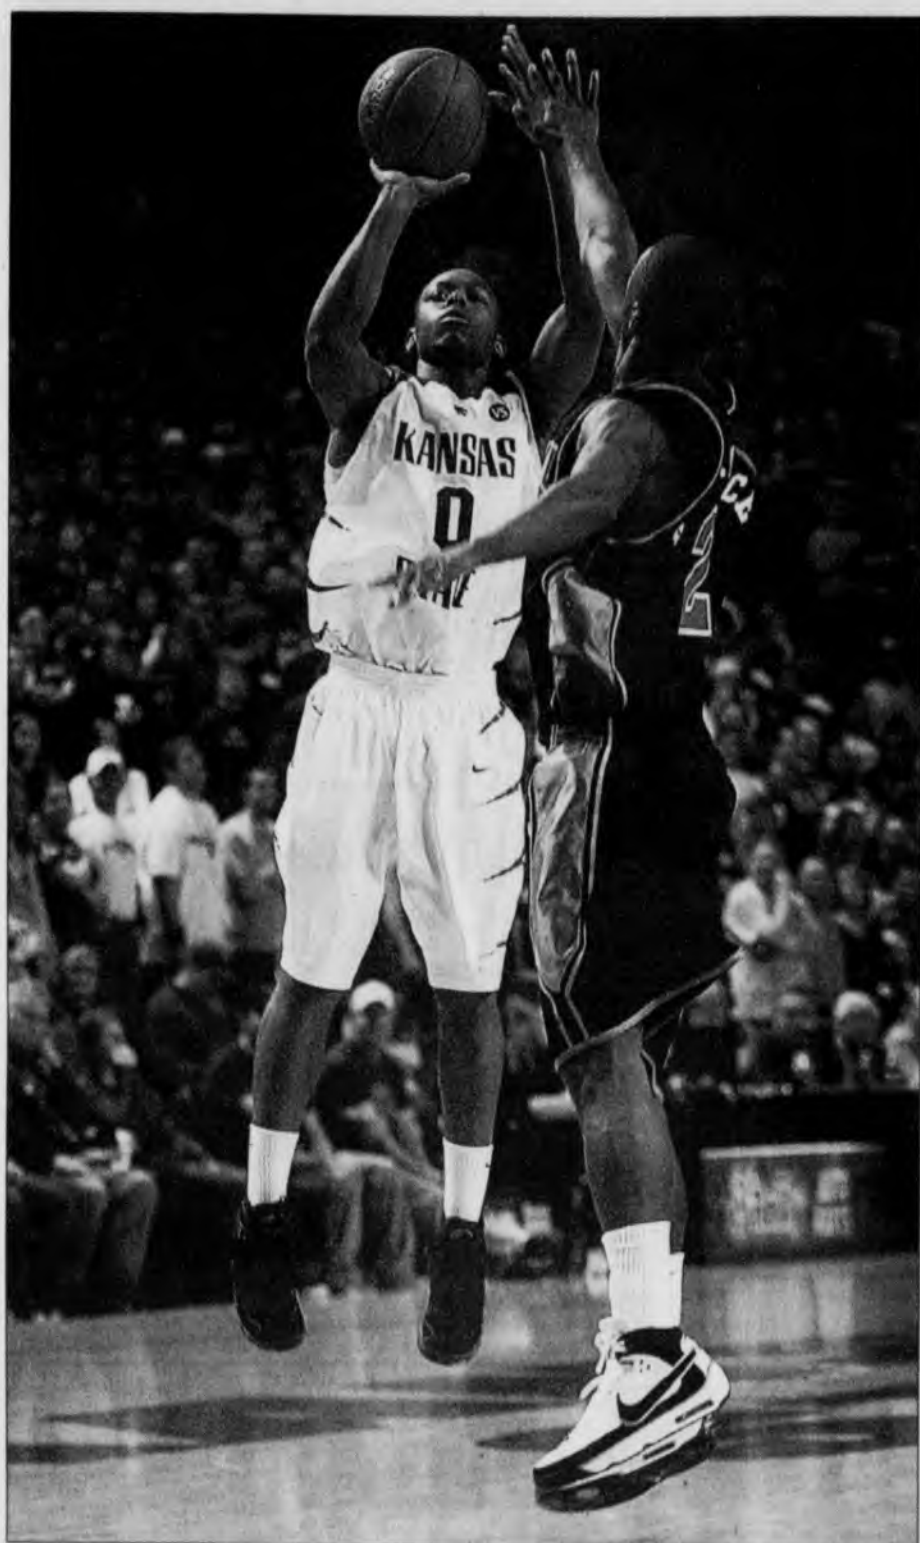

It just means people are going to resort to even sneakier ways to get ahead in the attempt to be No. 1.

Converting 3's important for Cat victory

Freshman guard Jacob Pullen, will face the KU Jayhawks, Saturday in Lawrence, Kan. Pullen has averaged 1.3 three-pointers per game.

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State has the three-point shots falling, the Wildcats can accomplish great things.

The best evidence of this came Jan. 30 when the Wildcats (18-9, 8-5 Big 12 Conference) made 12 three-pointers and knocked off then-No. 2 KU 84-75 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Since then, K-State has averaged 6.5 three-pointers per game and has dropped five of its last eight games. Freshman guard Jacob Pullen, who leads the team with an average of 1.3 three-pointers made per game, said the team hasn't shot well since the KU game.

"We haven't made shots like that since the KU game," Pullen said. "Other games we made shots, but we haven't made threes and that's going to be important."

K-State will continue its attempt to out-shoot opponents from the perimeter when it plays KU at 8 p.m. Saturday at Allen Fieldhouse.

It hasn't just been shooting the three-point ball that has been hurting the Wildcats, but it has also been defending the three-point line.

In K-State's 74-65 loss to Texas on Monday, the Wildcats made

Wildcats to compete in Big 12 finals

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track and field team looks to regain a spot among the conference leaders after the men and women finished 11th and 10th, respectively, in last year's Big 12 Indoor Conference Championships.

Competing Friday and Saturday at the Devaney Sports Center, in Lincoln, Neb., 14 men and 28 women will represent the Wildcats.

The men's team is not expected to place high because of the small size of the squad. Track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said it has always been his philosophy to take athletes who are capable of making the finals in their respective events, and that is the kind of athlete he has competing this weekend.

Junior high jumper Scott Sellers said he expects his teammates to compete well, but he doesn't expect that to show in the final standings.

"We're not real deep," Sellers said. "On paper it may look like we didn't do very well. I think everyone will do well, but it may not necessarily be conveyed in the results."

Sellers, who placed second in the high jump last year at the conference meet, said the high jump field is very deep, and it will take a special jump to win.

"A big part is staying relaxed, because when the bar gets real high, I tend to try too hard and over-do things," Sellers said. "I've got to stay relaxed and make the necessary adjustments that personally I think I need to make and listen to some of the things Coach is telling me."

Along with the jumpers, Rovelto said he looks to the team's three heptathletes, junior Adam Fretwell and freshmen Moritz Cleve and Rok Derzanic, to do well for the men. He said the heptathlon could be the deepest and most interesting event of the meet.

On the women's side, the Wildcats will look to some usual contributors to carry the load. Junior Loren Groves and senior Laci Heller finished first and third in the conference championships last year in the weight throw and could finish one-two this season. Groves said throwing well early will be important.

"If I open up with a legal throw and it's decent, then that will just be my starter, and I will just build from there on out," Groves said. "We have a good chance of going one and two and helping out the team a lot."

Senior Morgan Bonds also will provide scoring opportunities for the Wildcats. As the two-time reigning Big 12 indoor champion in the 600-yard run, Bonds said she knows eyes will be on her.

"You know people know who you are, but it is also kind of nerve-racking because people are looking at you," Bonds said. "But it also makes you feel more confident because you have been there, you've done it before, and you know how the race will go."

Bonds also is competing in the 4x400-meter relay with seniors Donnie Parrish and Marny Honeycutt, and freshman Tiara Walpool.

While the Wildcats have not been able to capture the Big 12 Indoor Conference Championship in its 11 years of existence, they have had success in the meet. The men have finished among the top four teams five times, while the women have placed fourth or better eight times.

"It's going to be interesting because there are a lot of really good teams, and there are a lot of teams about in the same place we are, with a lot of young people," Bonds said.

After Iowa State hosted last season's meet, the conference championships return to their traditional home at Nebraska, which will be playing host to the meet for the eighth time.

"They do a great job of hosting championships," Rovelto said. "They've done a lot of them. They have a great officials association. ... Without question, it is one of the best facilities in the country."

Dietz, seniors to be honored Saturday at Bramlage

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Senior players, Kimberly Dietz, Carolyn McCullough and Shana Wheeler will play their final games as Wildcats this Saturday.

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three K-State women's basketball players will be stepping onto the Bramlage Coliseum floor for their final regular season home game of their careers when the Wildcats host the Missouri Tigers at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Seniors Kimberly Dietz, Carolyn McCullough and Shana Wheeler will be lacing up their sneakers one last time in front of the home crowd and also will be honored before the game as members of the 2008 senior class at K-State.

The Wildcats (19-8, 11-3 Big 12 Conference) are coming off a hard-fought home victory against Nebraska, 69-65.

K-State took the lead on a layup by junior guard Shalee Lehning in the final seconds, and a final attempt by the Huskers to tie the game failed.

Dietz put the game away by hitting a pair of free throws.

The Tigers (9-18, 2-12 Big 12) are coming into the matchup against K-State reeling, having lost 11 of their last 12 contests. Missouri had a chance to win two games in a row for the first time in conference play on Wednesday, but fell short at home against Iowa State 58-54.

In addition to preparing for another Big 12 battle, the Wildcats have to deal with the emotion of being in the home locker room with their whole team intact for the final time, which is something Lehning doesn't take for granted.

"Dietz is amazing," Lehning said. "I just consider it a blessing to have the opportunity to play with her both on and off the court; she's just an amazing individual."

"[Dietz] is so fun to be around, and she has the ability to walk into a room and just light it up," she said.

Dietz said the game will be emotional, but she wants to ensure the ceremony at the beginning of the game isn't the only high point of the day.

"It's obviously the last

GAMING

EA suffers from lack of gaming options

Countless sports-gamers are followers of the Madden series of games, and they have good reason. Madden football games are some of the most realistic and interactive of the genre, but they're not for everyone. That's where developer Electronic Arts loses customers.

BRANDON STEINERT

A few years ago, EA bought the National Football League license and became the monopolizing company of all NFL video games. The contract would have ended in 2009, but was extended this month until the football season, according to joystiq.com.

For gamers like me, who are somewhat apathetic about sports games, football video games were dead. The "NFL Fever" and "2K" franchises, both of which offered a very user-friendly interface for newcomers, were discontinued. With the lack of competition in its genre, Madden games haven't had a reason to improve all that much and have hardly changed at all besides updated names, in the last few years.

Right before EA's move to monopolize the genre, the other football games were trying new concepts like "first person mode," where gamers could look through the helmet of the player they were controlling and various other creative ideas. Now all we have is the repetitive "hike the ball, pick an open receiver" option mixed with some aspects only the most hardcore football lover would understand.

"Even if I take this at face value, it's clear that this game is a failure no matter how you try and qualify it," said the "NFL Tour" review in Game Informer magazine.

Beyond Madden, EA has squelched another potential hit game franchise, the James Bond series. Any gamer who owned a Nintendo 64 played "Goldeneye 007." When customers demanded an improved first-person shooter, EA bought the rights and started making its own game with new ideas that eventually failed.

Despite EA's obvious failing, they have prevailed in some other areas that remain competitive, such as the racing genre with its "Need For Speed" series. EA also has entertained war-game fanatics with "Battlefield 2" on the personal-computer platform and various others.

EA should open up the NFL genre to other companies again, as competition drives continually improved products, and Madden games definitely could be improved.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Each one of the Brenner family's Corvettes has a name on its license plate. Bradley, Brien, Jenni, and soon, Baileigh — or "Bailee" for the sake of space. Parents Jenni and Mark Brenner dubbed the family's Camaro "Blake" after their oldest son.

Jenni Brenner, an aerobics instructor at K-State, said her husband, has been collecting cars since he was 16, when he restored a 1967 Rally Sport Camaro. He had antique tags made with his children's and wife's names on them for the cars he owns, which are more than 30 years old.

Brenner's cars make up just one of the interesting collections that can be found around K-State. Jesse Grimm, freshman in computer science, collects Scooby-Doo memorabilia. Katie Fooshee, sophomore in family studies and human services, has covered her dorm loft in name tags. Each of the collections had different origins, and all are still growing.

Jenni Brenner said her husband has collected 13 cars that he has restored or purchased from friends. He has only sold a few of them.

"It's more a passion and a hobby than any type of money matter," Brenner said.

Brenner said when she and her husband were dating, he picked her up in a 1980 Corvette for their first date. On the second date, he brought a Cadillac; the third time, he was driving a different Cadillac. Brenner said she had grown curious, and finally asked, "How many cars do you have?" He owned seven at the time.

Brenner said their children assume they eventually will own the cars that have their names on the plates. Their 13-year-old son, Blake, is only three years away from getting a driver's license, and his heart is already set on the Camaro, Brenner said.

Grimm started accumulating Scooby-Doo items when he was in sixth grade. His friends all gave him Scooby-Doo gifts for his birthday that year, giving him a new hobby.

Grimm said he has liked watching Scooby-Doo cartoons since he was little and saw the first showing of the movie in high school. A girl sitting near him in the theater even thought he was Shaggy, his favorite character.

"It's a toss-up," Grimm said, trying to determine his favorite character. "But Shaggy takes it."

Key chains and key rings, about 20 stuffed Scoobys, several alarm clocks and an almost full-sized locker comprise his collection, which is worth about $1,000.

"I probably will sell it," Grimm said. "I'll wait for it to get important."

He said the collection has been in storage since his freshman year of high school. But his mom still manages to add to it whenever she can. A car freshener and a WWSD (What Would Scooby-Doo?) bumper sticker are some of the latest additions.

"Whenever my mom is out, she'll grab something small," Grimm said.

Fooshee's name tags go beyond the normal conception of collectibles. She said she gets them mostly from Christian Challenge and Navigators events, but also collects tags from parties or Bible studies.

"I just ask people if I can have their name tags," she said. "Usually it's people I know, but sometimes it's people I don't know, and they'll just look at me weird."

She said she has covered one side of her loft almost completely in sticky name tags, and is working on the side facing the wall.

"I got tired of how boring my loft looked, and wanted to do something that was unique," Fooshee said. "I'm slowly working my way up. It's definitely a work in progress."

Some of Fooshee's favorites have more than just names on them. Name tags from Challenge, for instance, will sometimes have pictures drawn in the corner that correspond with questions like "What's your favorite book?" or "What would you want to have if you were trapped on an island?"

"One night I left Challenge with like five or six name tags on me," Fooshee said. "People were like, 'So who are you?'"

Fooshee has started using Mod Podge to stick the tags on her loft, and said she hopes to continue working on it this semester.

Whether it's made of name tags, Scooby-Doo memorabilia or cars, each of these collections exhibit some kind of passion or interest.

"I laugh," Brenner said about her husband's love for cars. "I know it's his passion, his love. I just accept it because that's part of him."

Renowned musician to perform

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marvin Hamlisch, the only living person to win a Grammy, Oscar, Emmy, Tony, Golden Globe and Pulitzer Prize, will perform at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

Hamlisch will be appearing on behalf of the Friends of McCain, an organization that raises money to support McCain Auditorium performances and projects.

Todd Holmberg, executive director of McCain, said Hamlisch was extremely popular in the 1970s and '80s.

"A lot of younger folks might not have heard of him, but he used to be a household name," Holmberg said.

Holmberg said the stage won't be full of performers, just Hamlisch and a piano with an occasional guest singer. Hamlisch also will use his skills as an improvisational comedian to entertain the crowd.

"He will probably poke gentle fun about being in the middle of Kansas," Holmberg said. "Every concert with him is different."

'Idol's Amanda Overmyer busted for DUI in 2006

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Amanda Overmyer, the raspy "American Idol" contestant with two-toned haired, was busted on driving under the influence charges two years ago.

The Mulberry, Ind., native was pulled over in Crawfordville, after authorities clocked her driving more than twice the speed limit in a 45 mph zone. She also ran a red light, according to Splash News.

Overmyer had a blood alcohol level of .108.

Whitney Houston heading back to the stage

LONDON, England — Singing sensation Whitney Houston is heading back to the stage, Access Hollywood has learned.

The "One Moment in Time" legend will head to London this May to perform at the Caudwell Children's Legend Ball at Battersea Evolution.

"We are thrilled to have an artist of Whitney's caliber to headline the event," the charity's founder, John Caudwell, told Marie Claire UK. "Last year was a huge success, and with Whitney's support, we are fully expecting this year's event to be bigger and better than ever."

Rep: Nicole Kidman did not drink at Oscars

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Nicole Kidman's representative has denied a report that the pregnant star drank wine at last week's Oscars.

Cindy Adams wrote in her New York Post column on Tuesday, "boozing backstage during the Oscarcast is a no-no. But if you're pregnant"

Nicole Kidman it's a yes-yes. She wanted white wine. She got it."

"Not true," the rep told Us Weekly. "She drank lemon zinger and water and was nursing a very bad cold."

In fact, sources tell Access Hollywood that Kidman stayed in a backstage Oscars dressing room for most of the night because of her cold.

MOVIE REVIEW

Semi-Pro predictable of Ferrell but better than normal performances

"Semi-Pro"

Review by Brendan Praeger

The Will Ferrell sports movie is slowly becoming a comedy sub-genre of its own.

"Semi-Pro," which opens today, joins "Talladega Nights: The Ballad of Ricky Bobby," "Blades of Glory," and "Kicking and Screaming" on the list of Will Ferrell comedies aspiring to rise above the entertainment level of an extended "Saturday Night Live" skit.

"Semi-Pro" is the next evolution of this profitable but predictable comedy template.

The plot follows Jackie Moon (Ferrell), the owner-coach-player of the American Basketball Association's Flint (Mich.) Tropics. An impending merger with the National Basketball Association causes Moon to rally his team in hopes of surviving the merger.

Moon begins by trading a washing machine for a former NBA star (Woody Harrelson) and creating ridiculous promotions to sell tickets.

As a sports movie, the plot is fairly predictable. The team stinks, but a couple doses of inspiration help the players turn everything around. Of course, anyone seeing a Will Ferrell comedy for the outstanding plot is already looking in the wrong place.

The storytelling does take a step forward from previous Ferrell films by giving his character less development. Usually, a lack of character development would be a bad thing, but by centering the dramatic story lines around Woody Harrelson's character, Ferrell is allowed to stay likable without becoming tiresome.

The rest of the supporting cast provides the comedic boost required to lift "Semi-Pro" above the standard comedy.

An unintentional Russian roulette scene provides a good sense of the entire movie. It isn't anything particularly creative and everyone in the audience knows what's going to happen, but it's still funny.

MYERS | Gen. returns to retain Kansas roots

then you realize, no, you're not really one of them. You're the retired guy," he said.

Almost a month after Myers retired JCS chairman, he accepted the position as foundation professor at former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's Landon Lecture on Nov. 9, 2005. Myers said he decided to return to K-State because he grew up as a Kansan and missed driving through the Flint Hills and going to a land-grant university.

Myers said he was never stationed near Kansas after serving in ROTC program at K-State until toward the end of his career. He said he appreciated his time at K-State and the university's continual recognition of his career accomplishments.

"My wife's from Manhattan, so we wanted something to keep our Kansas roots alive, and I thought this was perfect," he said.

Myers left Manhattan last Friday and won't be back for two months. When he returns, he will talk to classes, ROTC students and maybe Fort Riley soldiers and officers. He might have time to spend a few minutes in his bare office, but that would be only for a break from his full schedule.

He said the university has plans to build a military history institute and hopes to move his office there. Then, Myers said, he hoped to visit more often and bring in important files and other memorabilia to fill out his office.

WAGE | Reitz vows to introduce bill again

not share the same concern for the bill. He said the association did not think the bill was necessary because few workers in the state actually make the minimum wage income.

"Who's going to work for that?" he said. "Nobody. It's a pointless law. People get all up-in-arms about it, but so what? Nobody's making $2.65, everybody's making over minimum wage anyway. ... We're not against people making a decent wage by any means, but we've contended with this for some time with the Department of Labor as far as who's really paying $2.65 an hour."

Fayler said those mostly working at minimum wage are tipped employees who, when tips are accounted for, make more than the minimum. If the bill were passed, he said employers with tipped employees would have been forced to increase their base pay by $1.50 per hour, which Fayler said isn't business friendly.

"That money's got to come from somewhere," he said. "So they're looking at raising prices to cover it. It's also counterproductive to other employees that are making over the minimum wage, because they're saying, 'Well, he got a pay increase, where's mine?' It's inflationary for the overall pay scale."

But K-State economics professor Jim Ragan said if the bill had passed, the effects in terms of higher prices would have been mild.

Ragan said if wage rates increase, the cost of business also will increase, ultimately increasing costs for consumers. However, state minimum wage only applies to the small percentage of businesses that do not engage in interstate commerce and those whose sales are less than $500,000 annually. Those who do not meet one of those descriptions are subject to federal minimum wage, which is $5.85 an hour. Credit card transactions are considered interstate commerce.

Though the number of Kansans receiving the state minimum wage is small, they should not be overlooked, Reitz said. He countered Fayler's claim by saying there are currently 17,000 people in Kansas who are being paid $2.65 an hour, an amount that he said is impossible to make a living on.

If the minimum was increased, Reitz said it not only would give those workers an opportunity to get by, but also might create competition for businesses participating in interstate commerce, prompting them to increase wages as well.

"I think it's really a political issue more than economic issue," said Ragan. "A [different] way government could help with low wage workers to increase their pay would be through some alternative program - make it possible for workers to get additional schooling."

Fayler also offered an alternative to the bill and said the state minimum wage should be repealed altogether and reverted to the federal amount. But Reitz said he is a firm believer in keeping and increasing the state minimum.

"I'm disappointed it didn't pass," he said, "but we'll try it again next year, just like we did this year, and just like we did last year."

BLU-RAY | HD DVDs lack space, useability

technology of the future.

Manhattan Wal-Mart electronics associate Justin Adams said this was a good decision because it will decrease the amount of uncertainty for consumers.

"Some movies either appear in Blu-ray or HD DVD, but most of the studios chose Blu-ray," he said.

Adams said the main difference between the two formats is the level of capacity. He said Wal Mart chose Blu-Ray because it was the popular choice for most movie and game studios. The current "it" gaming system, Playstation 3, uses the Blu-ray format and was a big factor in choosing Blu-ray over HD, he said.

Recent K-State graduate

Tom Swift said he is content with Wal-Mart's recent decision.

"This just means now there's really only one format that people have to choose from," he said. "It's better for me because that's the kind of format that I had."

Swift, who owns a Playstation 3, said although consumers now have Blu-ray as a choice, it is the better decision as far as quality.

"As far as quality, Blu-ray does hold more - the HD DVD players were just cheaper than Blu-ray," he said.

Swift said the price of Blu-ray DVD players are declining and the discs have always been the same price as HD DVDs. If people are interested in gaming, Blu-ray is the way to go, he said.

MEN | Outside guards' shooting frees post

seven three-pointers, but allowed the Longhorns to make 10 three-pointers, ultimately causing K-State to lose by nine points.

Freshman forward Bill Walker said the three-point shot is important for the Wildcats because when they are making the shots, it makes playing easier for freshman forward Michael Beasley, K-State's leading scorer at 26.2 points per game.

"When we are able to hit threes we can stretch out the defense and we are able to get the ball in to [Beasley] and he can work inside," Walker said. With five Wildcats players averaging around one three-pointer made per game, Pullen said it will take a team effort to improve the perimeter shooting when another player is missing his basketball shots.

"It's a team effort so if I am not making shots, hopefully [Stewart] is and if he isn't make shots then Blake [Young] got to make shots, and if not him, it's everybody - teams aren't going to allow [Beasley] to beat them by himself."

Walker summed up the shooting problems with a small message that shooting woes are just part of playing basketball.

"You can't have a great record day every day, you got to learn to live with it."

WOMEN | Dietz plays final game at home

game, so I definitely want to go out with a bang and go out with a win," Dietz said. "It's just been great here at K-State."

Dietz also said her time here at K-State has been an unbelievable experience.

"I've loved every single minute of it, every single game, every single practice," Dietz said. "I have great teammates and great coaches that have just made my experience.

"It's been the most amazing experience I've been in," she said.

Fans see the talent Dietz possesses on the court, but Lehnning said what makes Dietz special is what she is like off the basketball court.

"She definitely is the epitome of what K-State is all about, and so we are definitely doing to miss her," Lehnning said. "K-State is going to miss her because she is one of a kind."

Slow progression

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

The December 2007 ice storm and an abundance of snow this winter has put the parking garage project behind schedule.

Parking garage behind schedule due to winter weather

By Clifford Watkins
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dirt and large machinery, including a crane that can be seen blocks away from campus, were a constant part of the scene in front of the K-State Student Union for most of the winter months.

"Due to weather, we may run a little past," said Lawrence Murray, head garage site contractor for Murray and Sons Construction Company Inc., of the completion schedule. The projected completion date for the garage is still December 2008, but the ice storm in December and abundance of snow did not help with the progress and completion of the garage, Murray said.

AN ANSWER TO THE PARKING PROBLEM?

Even when the garage is completed, it is not certain that the $15.9 million structure will solve the parking issues at K-State, despite the long wait and inconveniences the garage has caused for students, faculty and staff.

Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president of human resources at parking services, said the new parking garage will not necessarily solve all the parking issues at K-State.

"The new garage will certainly help in the central core of campus," Leitnaker said. "But will the new parking garage really meet parking needs for the whole campus? We will have to just wait and see."

When completed, the new garage boasts four new levels of parking space with 1,334 new parking stalls.

"This will be an enormous increase to what we previously had," said Lydia Peele, student body vice president and senior in secondary education-mathematics. "The new garage is really going to help because it will open up spaces in other areas, but will not solve all the parking problems."

Students show support by registering to donate blood marrow

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bria Chism was a bright-eyed girl ready to conquer the world, until the African-American 6 year old was diagnosed with Chronic Myeloid Leukemia.

Her family searched for a blood marrow donor in the U.S., but found a shortage of African-American donors and learned matches are usually found in the recipient's ethnic community. After resorting to an overseas search, Bria received a successful transplant, but it was too late, and other aspects of the illness had overcome the kindergartner's fragile body; she died in her grandfather's arms on July 2, 1999.

Because of this tragedy, The Bria T. Chism foundation was created by Bria's grandparents, Walter and Gail Chism, to increase awareness of the need of bone marrow donations in the minority communities.

The Chisms came to the K-State Student Union Courtyard Sunday afternoon to prompt students to register to donate blood marrow.

Only 20 percent of black people find a bone marrow match, while 50 percent of Hispanics and 80 percent of Caucasians do, according to the Heart of America Bone Marrow Registry.

Gloria Conner, president of Zeta Phi Beta sorority Inc., said she met the founders of the organization at a KU blood marrow drive, and decided it was something she wanted to bring to Manhattan. Beta Sigma Chi Christian Sorority co-sponsored the event.

Conner, senior in family studies and human services, said the Sunday drive successfully registered 31 students to donate. She said her sorority is planning to become certified to register people so they can have drives more often at K-State.

Curtis Weathersby, sophomore in open option, swabs his mouth for a DNA match for possible marrow recipients at the blood marrow drive in the K-State Student Union.

Lisle Alderton

Walter and his wife sat patiently in the Union waiting for passersby to stop by and donate to the cause.

Medicinal marijuana legislation fails to pass

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A proposed bill in a Kansas Senate committee that would establish a medical marijuana defense act failed to advance further nearly three weeks after its introduction.

After testimony from supporters and opponents on Feb. 11, the Senate Committee on Health Care Strategies members chose to not advance the proposed bill to a stage of committee debate. The legislation is now considered "dead" for the 2007 Kansas legislative session, but those in favor and against the issue continue their debate and stances.

THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Senate Committee on Health Care Strategies vice chairman Pete Brungardt, R-Salina, said the proposed legislation died in committee Friday because of today's Kansas legislative session turnaround.

The legislature now is in the second year of its biennium, which means all proposed bills in either the Kansas House or Senate had to leave the Senate on or before Friday. An exception to the rule takes place if proposed legislation is introduced in the Ways or Means Committee or Federal State of Affairs, in which case the bill would have until the end of the legislative session, Brungardt said.

Health Strategies committee members had a general consent that more medically effective and legal drugs exist, Brungardt said, and the proposed legislation received no further debate or discussion in committee.

"The impression you get with casual talk from members is that it was not supported," Brungardt said.

The proposed Senate bill would be known as the Medical Marijuana Defense Act, according to the proposed legislation. The proposed bill defined what constitutes a "debilitating medical condition" and "written certification" from a physician.

According to the proposed Senate bill, "debilitating medical condition" might include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following:

- Cancer, glaucoma, positive status for HIV, AIDS, hepatitis C, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, Crohn's disease, agitation of Alzheimer's disease or the treatment of these conditions; or

- A chronic or debilitating disease or its treatment that produces one or more of the following: Cachexia or wasting syndrome; severe pain; severe nausea; seizures, including, but not those limited to, those characteristic of epilepsy; bladder spasticity or inflammation or severe and persistent muscle spasms, including, but not limited to, those characteristic of multiple sclerosis.

THIS WEEK

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1879: U.S. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY CREATED

Congress established the U.S. Geological Survey, an organization that played a pivotal role in the exploration and development of the West.

Though the rough geographical outlines of much of the American West were known by 1879, the government still had astonishingly little detailed knowledge of the land. Earlier federal exploratory missions under men like Ferdinand Hayden and John Wesley Powell had begun to fill in the map, yet much remained to be done. Congress decided to transform the earlier system into a permanent government agency, known as the United States Geological Survey.

TUESDAY 1933: FDR INAUGURATED

At the height of the Great Depression, Franklin Delano Roosevelt was inaugurated as the 32nd U.S. president.

In his famous inaugural address, delivered outside the east wing of the U.S. Capitol, Roosevelt outlined his "New Deal" — an expansion of the federal government as an instrument of employment opportunity and welfare — and told Americans, "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

It was a rainy day in Washington, and gusts of rain blew over Roosevelt as he spoke, he delivered a speech that radiated optimism and competence, and a broad majority of Americans united behind their new president and his radical economic proposals to lead the nation out of the Great Depression.

WEDNESDAY 1963: HULA-HOOP PATENTED

The Hula-Hoop, a hip-swiveling toy that became a huge fad across America when it was first marketed by Wham-O in 1958, was patented by the company's co-founder, Arthur "Spud" Melin.

About 25 million Hula-Hoops were sold in its first four months of production alone.

THURSDAY 1931: 1ST RADIO NEWSREEL DEBUTS

The first radio newsreel, The March of Time, debuted on this day in 1931.

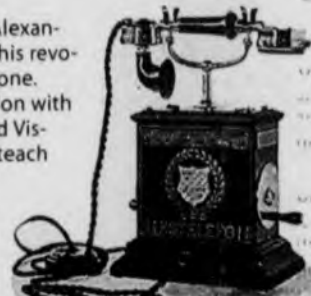

The show, associated with Time magazine, featured dramatizations of news events, complete with music, sound effects, and a stable of actors to impersonate real news figures.

In 1942, the show shifted to straight news with only a few dramatized events.

FRIDAY 1876: BELL PATENTS TELEPHONE

On this day in 1876, 29-year-old Alexander Graham Bell received a patent for his revolutionary new invention — the telephone. The Scottish-born Bell worked in London with his father, Melville Bell, who developed Visible Speech, a written system used to teach speaking to the deaf.

In the 1870s, the Bells moved to Boston, where the younger Bell found work as a teacher at the Pemberton Avenue School for the Deaf. He later married Mabel Hubbard, one of his students.

New health insurance uses savings to target young, healthy singles

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The stereotypical college students are young, healthy and single. Because of these factors, they have a new option when it comes to choosing health insurance. There is a type of health insurance that is specifically designed with this demographic in mind.

Health Savings Account plans are the latest type of health insurance that specifically markets itself toward young insurance buyers.

According to the United States Department of the Treasury's Web site, "Health Savings Accounts (HSAs) were created by the Medicare bill signed by President Bush on December 8, 2003, and are designed to help individuals save for future qualified medical and retiree health expenses on a tax-free basis."

GET INSURANCE EARLY

Fred Brock, assistant professor of journalism and author of "Health Care on Less Than You Think," said health savings accounts are for the young, healthy and wealthy.

Brock said students should buy health care during their senior year because they will be entering the work force and will more than likely be losing parent's health benefits by this time.

He recommended getting an HSA and contributing to it, so that when a student is out of school, they have health insurance already set up.

Those who are insured pay a low monthly fee and contribute toward a savings account that helps to pay office visits, hospitalization and other plan-specific items like prescriptions. HSA plans that pay in full once deductible limits are reached are available.

"The money you save on premiums can be put into your tax-favored health savings account (HSA). You can withdraw the money to help pay your deductible or other qualified health care expenses. Once your deductible is met, the insurance plan starts paying for covered expenses," according to the United Health Care insurance Web site.

ROLL-OVER INCENTIVE

One incentive of the account is that if the money in the HSA isn't completely used that year, it rolls over into the next year.

This means students could ostensibly put less in their HSA the next year. Using the rollover method each successive year would mean less money being spent on health care.

The UHC site also states, "Your unspent savings roll over year after year." The rollover system in HSA's is beneficial when trying to save money on health insurance, but it is the interest earned on the HSA combined with tax deductions and deferments that are the biggest draw for this plan.

HSA users also can withdraw money from their account tax-free and without withdrawal fees for medical items like eyeglasses. According to UHC's Web site, "Your health savings grow tax-deferred, and can be withdrawn tax-free to help pay your deductible or for other qualified health care expenses like prescriptions, vision, or dental care."

When the HSA buyer reaches age 65, they can withdraw funds for non-medical reasons without penalty, but they must pay the income tax.

The penalty for withdrawal of funds for non-medical reasons is often 10 percent for HSA users who are not 65, according to a recent Washington Post article.

HSA insurance can act similarly to an Independent Retirement Account. Some HSA's allow employees to contribute pre-tax dollars, but independently purchased insurance must be post-tax dollars, according to a Washington Post article.

Some employers will also make matching contributions to HSA plans just like 401Ks. Also like 401Ks, HSAs can be rolled over from one employer to another.

ACCOUNT DOWNFALLS

However, there are a few drawbacks. If female students plan on having a family soon they should be aware that, pregnancy and birth are not covered in most plans, but shopping around might find an HSA that covers this.

Children aren't covered in some of the plans, and infants who need many visits to the doctor for immunizations and checkups can quickly go through a family's deductible.

If students have any kind of health problems that require multiple doctor visits, hospital stays or prescriptions, this can easily go through all of the savings, which ends up costing more than traditional medical insurance, and it puts the student behind the next year.

Starting the plans initially is expensive compared to more traditional insurance.

Starting an HSA the first year will run a buyer a minimum of $1,100 for the deduct-

DRAMATIC GROWTH OF HEALTH SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Year (2004)...

- 438,000 - Individuals who were covered in November 2004 by HSA-type insurance plans.
- 113,000 (roughly 240,000 individuals) - IRS data on individual tax returns reporting HSA deductions in tax year 2004.

Now...

- 3.2 million - Seven-fold increase to individuals covered by HSA type insurance plans (November 2004 to December 2005).
- 31 percent - Previously uninsured individuals buying insurance.
- 33 percent - Small businesses not previously offering coverage.
- About 50 percent - Age 40 or older.

The Future...

- 14 million by 2010 - Treasury Department projection of HSA policies (covering 25 million to 30 million people) - based on current law.
- 21 million by 2010 - Treasury Department HSA policies estimates rise by 50 percent (covering 40 to 45 million people) - based on the president's health care initiative.

- United States Department of the Treasury ible for a single person.

The max contribution to a deductible for a single person is $2,900, according to the U.S. Treasury Department Web site.

If the deductible is high, then the monthly payments are often lower, but that is dependent on what policy a person chooses.

Brock said he recommends checking out www.ehealthinsurance.com when looking for health insurance because they have many different types of providers and plans.

If the HSA user doesn't have the money to put into their savings account, then all doctor visits, prescriptions and hospitalization will be out of pocket until the deductible is met.

It is possible to purchase deductible insurance for the first few days of opening the account on some plans. United Health Care offers deductible insurance for a one-time fee of $40.

HIT OR MISS

The editorial board selects Hit or Miss topics and writes them after a majority vote. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

HIT | WOMEN'S EQUESTRIAN TEAM

The K-State women's equestrian team won its meet last Friday against Oklahoma State. The 10-9 victory puts the team at 5-5 this season.

MISS | CURSE OF THE BLACK JERSEYS

There seems to be bad luck when the K-State men's basketball team wears its black uniforms. The Wildcats have only beaten Savannah State in the wretched black uniforms.

HIT | SPRING BREAK COUNTDOWN

Less than two weeks remain until the start of spring break. Students just have to pull through a few more tests, midterms and projects before enjoying a week of freedom.

MISS | LOW VOTER TURNOUT

This year's Student Governing Association primary election was 746 votes down from last year's total. This is nearly 20 percent less than the number of votes cast last year, which is only about 1 percent of the total student-body population.

HIT | BRIA T. CHISM FOUNDATION

The Bria T. Chism Foundation and other similar groups that promote research and awareness for patients needing bone marrow transplants are educating people on how to volunteer and donate much-needed marrow.

MISS | NO MEDICAL MARIJUANA

The proposed senate bill for the establishment of the medical marijuana defense act failed to make it out of the Committee on Health Care Strategies in Kansas. Maybe next legislative session, the bill will actually attract some discussion.

Crosswalk chaos

Walkers, drivers should display courtesy

There is a crosswalk crisis on our campus and in this town.

Anyone who has read the Fourum in the last week or simply walked across any street near campus is probably fed up with the lack of communication and care between drivers and walkers.

AUBREE CASPER

Jacob Renner, freshman in mechanical engineering, said, "I was walking across Denison [Street] by Throckmorton [Hall], and I had to start running because I thought I was going to be hit."

This isn't only an issue at K-State. Nationwide, public safety officials are taking note of such problems, but demographically, K-State students are a rare breed of pedestrian and driver trouble-makers.

According to a recent article in USA Today, pedestrian deaths in the United States have reached a rate of one every 110 minutes, and one injury every nine minutes. However, statistics also illustrate that a large percentage of pedestrians involved in vehicle accidents are either elderly or young children – not 18- to 25-year-old college students.

Some students even joke about getting hit and using the settlement money to pay off college-related debts. Well, continue this pattern of poor driving and walking on campus and you might just get your wish.

Here's the deal, pedestrians – if you aren't using those nifty, white stripes on the road to cross a street, you're fair game. Law.com said jaywalking is "walking across a street outside of marked crosswalks, and not at a corner, and/or against a signal light."

The Web site also discussed jaywalking fines. If there is vehicle traffic or clear markings of a place to cross, this is a traffic misdemeanor subject to fine and may be [but not conclusively] contributory negligence in the event of injury to the jaywalker by a vehicle.

Just because five other people are doing it doesn't make it any less illegal. Getting tickets from campus police is not an all-around pleasing solution to this problem.

However, there are ways to avoid this problem – starting the second you leave for your next class. Use the crosswalks. There is one every 75-100 feet on campus streets, strategically placed to be most convenient and flow with most students' paths. Being 15 feet down the street from one doesn't count.

Drivers shouldn't be expected to watch for people crossing at every point. Secondly, if cars are waiting for you to cross, walk faster. Please don't take forever. Drivers are trying to get somewhere on time, just like you.

As a final thought for drivers – slow down. The speed limit is 20 miles per hour on campus for a reason. This will also extend the life of your breaks and keep you from having to screech your tires seconds before you come close to killing a pedestrian. So when getting around Manhattan, particularly around and on campus, make mature decisions on foot and behind the wheel.

Just use the brain that got you to a university full of crazy drivers and pedestrians in the first place.

Students should be concerned about, fix unhealthy habits

These are truly exciting times we are living in. Media critic Marshall McLuhan once wrote, "If it works, it is obsolete." Now, more than ever, this rings true.

Technological innovation is at an all-time high.

With the world at our fingertips, it is easier than ever to live a sedentary lifestyle, especially on a college campus. There are so many ways to stay locked up all day – like studying, surfing the Internet and watching TV – that exercising on a daily basis can easily disappear from our list of priorities.

There is a significant problem with this apathy that is creeping into our lives.

According to an article in Time magazine, 60 percent of Americans do not exercise regularly.

"College is the first big transition in life, and it becomes an excuse not to exercise," said Steven Bray, kinesiology at McMaster University, in the article.

Bray tracked 127 college students and discovered college students in their first year exercise significantly less than the year before.

This can be attributed to the tendency of humans to abandon old rules as they enter new stages of life. Being a freshman in college and away from the eye of parents, makes self-indulgence somewhat inevitable.

For students eating at the dining centers on campus, learning the immense amount of control it takes to not overindulge in the pizza, ice cream and endless array of desserts offered at practically every meal can be a challenge.

I have learned how much will power it takes to maintain a nutritious diet, and I can honestly say that, with all these options, it is not easy.

These sugary

items like chocolate ice cream and butter-dipped french toast smothered in syrup certainly hold their power.

This makes it all the more vital to get a daily workout. With the stress of classes and for some students a part-time job, getting through the day can be difficult.

Food can become a subconscious mediator of feelings for the emotionally drained. It makes it even harder with fast-food chains constantly popping up along the street. Paul Krugman, columnist for

The New York Times and professor at Princeton University, observed how today's children and adolescents are the ones gaining the most pounds.

Richard Louv, former writer for the San Diego Union Tribune, also observed the disparity between his generation with ours.

In his book "Last Child in the Woods," he linked children's disconnection from the outdoors with the decrease in physical activity.

With spring around the corner, the warmer weather should be a lure for us all to take a break from the cyber-reality that swiftly steals our days away from us.

More than any other period of life, college is the time to get disciplined about the mind as well as the heart.

The Fourum bandit will speak in the third person.

Michael Beasley: 1-1 against KU. Josh Freeman: 0-2 against KU.

Is applesauce a food group yet?

What's your favorite color?

So, uh, to the lady who was singing Patsy Cline off key at the Union: I was really excited, but to be honest, I was there for the free pizza.

Learning a foreign language has shattered my mind so much, I think I'm forgetting how to speak English.

Hey, Fourum: I've fallen and I can't get up, and I'm naked.

Hey, everybody should play KSU women's rugby, because all the other sports are ignorant.

If there was a showdown between Michael

Beasley and Chuck Norris, who would win?

To the guy who asked, "Since when have the residence halls become a community?" Have you ever heard of a community bathroom?

Is it a good thing if my chem engineering professor uses the term "beast" to describe his equations?

Tag, you're it.

Cold as bananas out here? Try apples.

Forget Beasley. I want to have Darren Kent's babies.

To the guy who has the two-seat bicycle: You make me happy.

Darren Kent: Did it hurt when you fell from heaven?

To whoever first said life was like a box of chocolates: If only life was that sweet.

Hey, Mike Beasley: Lawrence is Africa.

Hey, Fourum: Did you know that chains are kinky, not twisted?

I'm all for a man who knows his reptiles.

You say that the guy you're engaged to is the best guy ever. Obviously you haven't met me. I guess you could call me when you get an opportunity.

To the girl that ran over the cat: I know you're a Classy Cat.

Too much sidewalk chalk.

I'm pretty upset Michael Beasley is not our student body president.

How do you make Classy Cats without no rhythm? I guess I should ask the girls on the team that.

Some girl just fell face down from the stairs of the library.

To the girl who's sitting on my couch in my apartment: Why are you here? Get out. I don't know you.

I cheated on the ACT and got a scholarship.

Can I get a ride to Wal-Mart?

Why do they call it SafeRide when no one ever answers?

K-State equestrian: Bring on the horse.

That trash can ran into me.

Kansas Senate considers apology to American Indians for mistreatment

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Senate is considering a resolution issuing a formal apology to American Indians for previous governmental actions.

The resolution would mean the Kansas legislature takes responsibility for the mistreatment of American Indians in Kansas.

"Mistreatment" includes broken treaties, forced removal of tribes and peoples from their homelands and removal of children from their families to try and assimilate them, according to the proposed resolution.

A similar resolution, introduced by U.S. Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., has already passed in the U.S. Senate.

Leslie Hannah, assistant professor of arts, science and business at K-State-Salina, and a Cherokee Indian, said the apology for broken treaties was one of the biggest points of the resolution.

"The broken treaties is the immediate issue, and it's certainly the most dominate with all the Indian nations," he said. "We have treaties that are less than 50 years old that have been violated. These are promises made from one nation to another, which one nation is obligated to fulfill, and they were violated."

"Everybody knew they were violated too, even the federal government knew they were violating them while doing it. And now the mere acknowledgement, that 'Yes, we did you dirty,' is at least a starting point."

State Sen. Julia Lynn, R-Olathe, introduced the resolution after a group of people in southeast Kansas involved in developing relations with American Indians presented the subject to her.

"They spent a lot of time in catching me up with the reality of what occurred with the breaking of our agreements with the tribes years ago," Lynn said, "and these are very peaceful people that really believe a formal apology would be one of the first steps in building a healthy relationship, so that we can do some work on repairing what has happened in the past."

"Because when there is not a formal acknowledgement of wrongdoing, it causes an inability to communicate. It creates a blockage."

Lynn is chairwoman of the Senate Joint Committee on Children's Issues.

When the time comes for the Senate to handle the children-issues session, she said.

She aims to propose mostly education programs for American Indian children.

Some think an apology is long overdue, considering the long history between the two nations.

"Nobody has been interested in [arranging an apology], and I think that people think that you are jumping in to some political areas that many don't want to get in," Lynn said.

She also addressed the reasons and thoughts on why the apology had not been issued previously.

"It is also a lot of misunderstanding; you really have to understand the problem and the reason," she said. "I spend a lot of time explaining it, and you get it or you don't."

As a step in the right direction toward a better relationship between two nations, this resolution brings hope and justification to some.

"Personally, it gives me a sense of relief," Hannah said. "I feel as an American Indian who has been trying to voice my opinion on things like this for many years, I feel justified in what I was doing. I want one side to acknowledge and the Indians to say we weren't angels ourselves, and we weren't."

"I want one side to stop playing the victimizer, and the other side to stop playing the victim and just put this stuff down and work together to build on the future," he said. "I think it can be done. I guess that is a very optimistic answer, but I like to find the silver lining in anything, no matter how dark the cloud may be."

Professor educates students, citizens about American Indian culture, history

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leslie Hannah's mission is to educate and destroy misconceptions U.S. citizens might have regarding American Indians.

"Many general citizens of the United States don't know much at all about American Indians," said Hannah, an assistant professor of arts, science and business at K-State-Salina. "They think they do, but they really don't."

Hannah is a Cherokee Indian from Tahlequah, Okla. He said he and his brother were raised in a fairly traditional Cherokee household where they were influenced by the traditional practices of their elders.

Hannah has been coined the "Myth Buster" who represents American Indians.

"People will ask questions about American Indians, and it's usually from a movie or a mascot," he said. "They tend to think that these images are historical documents, and this is not the case."

"Many of our family members practiced traditional Cherokee ways, so we were exposed to it from a young age."

Hannah has worked at K-State for three years and is involved with the Manhattan and Salina campuses. He travels between Salina and Manhattan at least once a week for various purposes, including his involvement on Faculty Senate, the General Education Task Force and International Activities Committee. Recently, Hannah traveled to Manhattan to give presentations in several classes.

"He's very engaging with the students," said Nancy Muturi, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications. "I think that's the whole idea - to get them involved from the beginning to the end."

Muturi had Hannah come speak to her Media, Race and Social Change class. Prior to his presentation in her class, Muturi said she had observed Hannah numerous times before when he had spoken elsewhere, which displayed his popularity on campus.

"He has a very interesting background and focus," she said. "As an American Indian, he's speaking from an inside perspective, which is different from reading a book."

Soon after his presentation, Muturi said students were eager to get involved and learn more about the culture. He was able to make a big impact on everyone - including herself - and was able to change the way they viewed American Indians, she said.

"We cannot make a social change without understanding who we're dealing with," she said. "We need to be able to understand American Indians before we think about changing."

Alisha McKoy had the opportunity to hear Hannah speak in her American Ethnic Studies class last semester. McKoy, junior in pre-health information management, said she didn't realize the amount of stereotypes the American Indian culture faces in regards to mascots and movies. As a result, McKoy said Hannah was able to make her develop a respect for the American Indian culture.

"I really didn't know they had that much of a struggle," she said. "My view was just very stereotypical, but he opened my eyes to go deeper than that."

Hannah said he wants to continue to have an effect on the community in order to educate minds about his culture. Before he leaves K-State, one of his main goals is to see more native studies classes in Manhattan and Salina.

"We need to give students more opportunities to learn about other people," he said. "I think students need to have exposure to other ways of thinking, and I'd like to be a part of that."

The sting of revenge

KU defends home court against K-State

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE — Going into Saturday's game, Kansas knew what it had to do, especially after dropping two of its last four conference games.

Five Kansas players scored in double-figures as dead-on Jayhawk shooting from the perimeter sank K-State Saturday, 88-74, in Allen Fieldhouse.

"They're a championship-caliber basketball team protecting their home court against a team that previously beat them," said K-State coach Frank Martin. "They came out and played the way I expected them to. I was proud of my guys for ... staying the course."

Freshman forward Michael Beasley scored 39 points on 11 of 23 shooting, but no other Wildcat could get into double-figures. K-State (18-10, 8-6 Big 12 Conference) jumped out to a 2-0 lead on free throws from senior guard Blake Young after he was fouled by KU senior forward Darrell Jackson. KU then went on a 9-2 tear, capped off by a two-point basket by sophomore forward Darrell Arthur at the 16:21 mark.

"They played with a lot of energy, especially at the beginning," said senior guard Clint Stewart. "They came out and jumped on us early and it was hard to overcome. It's hard to go on the road as it is and any time you get yourself down in a hole, it's going to be really hard."

Kansas (26-3, 11-3 Big 12) would extend its first-half lead to 21 on a three-point shot by junior guard Brandon Rush at the 9:35 mark. K-State cut the lead to 12 at half, but KU came out in the second half on a 11-0 run capped off by a dunk by Jackson to take KU's lead to 23.

The closest K-State got in the second half was 13, on a three-point shot by junior forward Darren Kent.

"For us to start the second half the way we did with the lack of effort and focus was just uncalled for," Martin said. "It was the difference in the game, right there."

When K-State junior guard Shalee Lehning saw the score of the Baylor and Texas A&M game during halftime, she said she had a small celebration by herself.

After Baylor's 72-53 loss and the Wildcats' 81-52 win over Missouri on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, K-State will play for at least a share of the Big 12 Conference season title at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Kansas.

In the final moments of the game, Lehning began spreading the word of Baylor's loss throughout the bench to those who didn't already know, and the small celebration turned into a larger one for the Wildcats.

Still, senior guard Carolyn McCullough emphasized the need to take care of business when the Wildcats go to Lawrence Wednesday.

"We are so excited for that game, so we are going to work really hard in practice and get ready for it," McCullough said.

Before the game, McCullough and fellow seniors Shana Wheeler and Kimberly Dietz were honored for their careers at K-State. Each played more than 10 minutes, and Dietz went about her usual business, scoring 19 points, including five three-pointers. Dietz called the win in her final home game the icing on the cake for her career with the Wildcats.

"It has really been the ride of a lifetime, and I have loved everything about it," Dietz said. "I have awesome teammates; we are all the best of friends and that has made this experience worthwhile."

Unusual about Dietz's performance was the amount of shots she took, going 7 of 20 from the field and 5 for 12 from the perimeter. K-State coach Deb Patterson called the game a "classic" Dietz performance.

"I think it's very fitting Kimberly would leave the floor tonight having hit five threes from the floor, having penetrated and been such a factor in putting pressure on the Missouri defense," Patterson said. "To finish the game with 19 points and six assists is just classic Kimberly Dietz and to play 35 minutes in the game."

"She's been the player that has really put this team in the position of being successful this year."

Bar fined for serving Arkansas running back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Arkansas regulators say a Little Rock nightclub will face a $500 fine for allowing underage Heisman Trophy runner-up Darren McFadden into the bar.

McFadden and at least four

others were at the bar when a fight broke out.

Alcoholic Beverage Control Director Michael Langley said the Ernie Biggs piano bar escaped a possible suspension of its liquor license because bar owners admitted letting the 20-year-old tailback inside on Jan. 10.

McFadden, who played for Arkansas and opted out of his final year of college eligibility in January, was not arrested but was handcuffed briefly. Police said a bouncer was hit in the face, but a police report didn't say by whom.

Coach Prince brings back Football 101 for K-State women for 3rd straight year

Dear women: tired of your significant other watching football all day while you have no idea what is going on during the big game? Football coach Ron Prince is holding his third-annual Football 101 class to help women gain a better understanding of the sport.

The class will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. April 5 at the Vanier Football Complex at the Bill Snyder Family Stadium. The cost is $60 plus an online registration fee of $7.27. There is a souvenir gift for participants, certificate of completion and food and drink supplied in the cost. Only 300 women are allowed to register, with an age limit of 18. Registration can be completed at kstatesports.com.

Some of the discussion topics will include the basics of the sport, strategies of the three main teams — defense, offense and special teams — as well as rules of the game and refereeing signals. There will also be a discussion on equipment the players wear on game day.

On-field demonstrations and interactive sessions also will be included in the class.

Also added this year will be an advanced football class for women, Football 201, which will be later in the year. The content will be different every year and it will open to those who have completed the basic course.

For more information, contact the K-State football office at 785-532-5876 or 1-800-992-9053.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Fans cross rivalry line with jeers at players

Fans tend to, on occasion, take situations a bit too far, particularly in rivalry games where the hatred runs deep. One of the growing problems in sports today isn't the players, but the crazed fans crossing the line and taking issues to a personal level.

This occurs on a daily basis in professional sports and it's beginning to spread to the collegiate level like wildfire.

The college atmosphere at sporting events has always been a place of passion, and pride. This is why I, along with many other devoted fans, love college athletics. However, many fans across the nation have crossed that invisible line between ethical and unethical behavior by taunting their opponents and even individual players.

Incidents like this are occurring at a frequent level all over the U.S., and athletic directors from different universities are apologizing for the actions of their student fan-bases.

For example an example that hits close to home, last year, the University Daily Kansan, the University of Kansas' collegiate newspaper, put a picture in the paper of K-State's then-headcoach of men's basketball Bob Huggins behind prison bars with the headline "Hugs and thugs."

These kinds of attacks are happening in other areas of the country as well.

This January, athletic directors at Oregon and Illinois have had to make apologies for the way their students treated two student-athletes.

Eric Gordon, a freshman guard for Indiana University, originally committed to play for Illinois, but then backed out of his commitment late in the process and signed his letter of intent to play for Indiana.

When the Hoosiers went to play their game at Illinois, the fans let him have it the whole game, yelling obscenities at him throughout the evening.

Kevin Love, a freshman center for UCLA, also was subjected to these verbal attacks when the Bruins traveled to Eugene, Ore. Love was from Oregon and his dad played for the Ducks, but he spurned them for UCLA, saying he didn't like the way Oregon went about recruiting him.

K-State fans are just as guilty as these other universities.

These students athletes are not paid to play the game like professional athletes are. However, fans are treating them as if they were.

But they are no different than us — they are just students trying to get an education like the rest of us. Their exception is they have been given a gift that allows them to excel on the hardwood as well as in the classroom.

They shouldn't be verbally and mentally punished for having a gift that many of us could only dream of having. A little good-natured ribbing never hurt anything, but let's keep it in an ethical perspective.

Also, younger generations see this mistreatment and take it to heart. Fans around the country need to help put a stop to it.

If we allow this to continue, then there's no telling how far it will go, and someday it might be your child being heckled or taunted at a junior-high or high-school game.

Sellers, Groves capture Big 12 titles in Nebraska

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aided by record-setting performances from juniors Scott Sellers and Loren Groves, the Wildcat men placed eighth and the women finished ninth in the Big 12 Conference Indoor Championships in Lincoln, Neb.

Clearing the bar at 7-6, Sellers broke his own K-State indoor high-jump record and gave the men their only event victory. He made his first two jumps easily, and then he struggled to clear a height of 7-03.75, before recording his best jump on his third and final attempt. Sellers made his record-breaking jump on his first attempt at that height.

"Scott jumped well," said K-State coach Cliff Rovelto. "I guess you know you're good when you [set a personal record] indoors, set the school record and people still think you could have done better. It's comical really, but that's just the level of expectation."

Sellers failed on three attempts to clear 7-7.25. The jump would have tied the best indoor jump in the U.S. this season.

Groves took the title in the weight throw for the second-consecutive year. Her toss of 70-03.00 is her career-best and broke the Big 12 record as well as the conference meet record. The throw also earned Groves her third NCAA automatic qualifying mark of the season.

"I don't think it is surprising, because she has thrown at such a high level for the whole season," Rovelto said. "It was just a matter of time before she did that."

Groves opened the competition with a throw of 64-05.25, and then on her second attempt she let loose the record-breaking toss.

Senior Laci Heller finished third in the weight throw, with a toss of 65-06.25. Her bronze finish marked the fourth time Heller has finished in the top three at the conference meet. She finished second as a freshman, took gold as a sophomore and finished in third place as a junior. Heller and Groves combined for 16 of the women's 54 points.

The men earned 16 of their 46 points in the heptathlon. Freshmen Moritz Cleve and Rok Derzanic finished second and third, respectively, and junior Adam Fretwell came in seventh. Each of the heptathletes set new personal bests in the event and reached NCAA provisional qualifying marks.

"The guys in the heptathlon did real well," Rovelto said. "There is no way we could have anticipated that we would have scored that many points in that event."

Junior Mike Myer ran his way to a fourth place finish in the 200-meter dash, and in the process broke the school record set by Terence Newman in 2001. Myer's time of 21.17 was his personal best and his first NCAA provisional qualifying mark. Myer also earned a fifth place finish, when he tied his personal best time of 6.77 in the 60-meter dash.

For the first time since her freshman year, senior Morgan

Bonds left the conference meet without the 600-yard run title. She raced to a second place finish with a season-best time of 1:21.29. Bonds had the fastest time in the prelims, but was beat by Sheryl Morgan of Nebraska.

Senior Donniece Parrish also took second place for the Wildcats. She earned the silver medal in the 400-meter dash with her NCAA provisionally qualifying time of 53.15. Her time broke the K-State record and bettered her previous best by eight-tenths of a second.

The Cats will compete next in the Iowa State Last Chance, Saturday in Ames, Iowa.

The K-State Equestrian team picked up its first win of the spring season Friday when the Wildcats defeated Oklahoma State 10-9 at Manhattan's Fox Creek Farm. The victory snapped a four-show losing streak.

FREEMAN

The Western squad tied the Cowgirls 5-5 on Friday, but the English squad was able to narrowly defeat the Cowgirls 5-4, giving the Wildcats the overall victory.

Junior Alyssa Freeman won the only MVP award for K-State as the Wildcats brought their overall record to 5-5 on the season.

"Freeman went out and rode phenomenal today in horsemanship," said Western coach Casie Williamson. "She has ridden a lot of horses and has a great feel for the game."

The Wildcats then competed in the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association western competition Saturday. The event consisted of two shows, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

K-State took first place among the seven-team field in the morning show and second place in the afternoon show.

K-State had nine riders post first-place finishes for the day, led by senior Emily Wolfe who placed first in intermediate horsemanship twice. Senior Dana Totten also finished strongly with first and second place finishes in advanced horsemanship.

"Everyone rode great today," Williamson said. "We rode well on our horses, and everyone looked like they had all the pieces to be successful. We made some mistakes, but we adjusted and never made the same mistake twice out there and that is important."

K-State will be host to Georgia in a head-to-head match Sunday.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team started out the Cardinal Classic in Beaumont, Texas, at a low point, but finished with three victories to take its record to 3-3.

Thursday, the first day of the Classic, ended in a 2-1 loss for the Wildcats against Arkansas State. Senior pitcher Brad Hutt only allowed six runs through eight innings of play, including three strikeouts, but the Wildcats were never able to get anything significant going offensively.

The team only had five hits against the Indians, with two of them coming off of junior Drew Biery. Arkansas State had back-to-back innings with runs in them, and K-State could only come up with a run in the top of the sixth, after sophomore Justin Bloxom doubled to right center to drive in junior Byron Wiley.

The Wildcats rebounded Friday with an 8-0 victory over Michigan State. Offensively for K-State, the team had 18 hits – four from freshman Carter Jurica. K-State continued its winning ways Saturday in a 4-1 victory over Lamar. The Wildcats had ten hits, including three off of the bat of

The Wildcats faced off again against Michigan State Sunday, beating the Spartans in a 10-9 decision. They had ten hits, including a team-high four from junior Nate Tenbrink. Tenbrink also had five RBI. K-State had five pitchers in the rotation, with the start going to sophomore A.J. Morris. Morris lasted three innings and allowed five runs.

K-State will travel Tuesday to San Antonio, Texas, to take on the University of Texas-San Antonio in a two-game stretch. The first game will be at 6 p.m. Tuesday, and the second will begin at noon Wednesday.

3rd round of 'Love' not charm

"Flavor of Love 3"

Review by Megan Molitor

I have always been a sucker for those cheesy reality dating shows. "Rock of Love" is my personal favorite, followed closely by "I Love New York" and even the absolutely ridiculous ones like "Next."

While it causes me severe pain to admit it, I have also been known to "accidentally" leave my TV on to watch what is, in my opinion, the king of classless television, "Flavor of Love," on VH1.

"Flavor of Love," which airs on Mondays, is in its third season of following an aging rap star, 48-year-old William Drayton Jr. known popularly as "Flavor Flav," on his never-ending quest for love. Well, if not love, then a quest for a half-naked woman half his age who will degrade herself constantly to win physical attention from him.

In the first two seasons, "Flav" — as the women affectionately call him — picked the women he wanted to get to know better out of the thousands who sent him videos declaring their undying love for a guy they had never met who wears clocks around his neck and asks people if they know what time it is.

This season, however, while Flav still picked most of the contestants himself, he allowed fans to pick a handful of the women online. After seeing them all together, it becomes apparent that the voter's taste in women is not much more developed than Flav's.

It would seem as though all "Flavor of Love" does is reinforce stereotypes that women are catty and cannot get along together. They wear clothing that does not make them look like women respectable men would never bring home to meet their parents, to put it as kindly as possible. All these women care about is landing a man, and a pretty disgusting one at that.

In a world in which women are already viewed as being a step or two down from their male counterparts, reinforcing these negative images of women as money-hungry plastic connivers who will claw each other to get a man just raises that glass ceiling higher and higher.

The women compete in daily challenges, usually something involving very little clothing and plenty of booty-shaking, to win solo dates with the clock-wearing Flav. One episode this season featured Flav on a hospital stretcher, and each woman had to play the nurse, complete with costume. Flav visited each of the "nurses," and each had to try to heal Flav's broken heart. For most of the women, this meant gyrating on top of him and whispering dirty things in his ear.

After each challenge, there is an elimination ceremony in which the women are lined up like prize dogs and Flav picks which woman gets to leave and go recover her dignity.

At the end, the winner of the show gets to date Flav, or so they say. Many would say it's obviously staged.

"Flavor of Love 3" is a trashy, classless show, and one I watch faithfully every Monday. Everyone needs a little self-esteem boost once in awhile — at least my life hasn't reached the point where I need to attract a man wearing a clock.

Captured moments

John Nolan is the lead singer and songwriter of Straylight Run. Nolan and his wife, Camille, met in 2005. The couple travel together across the country and world for Straylight Run's performances.

Alumna snaps daily shots of life, travels

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Camille Nolan received a small 110 cartridge camera at age 9 or 10 as a Christmas present. With her first camera, Camille would set up and photograph little scenarios like two white kittens on her bed.

In her early 20s, Camille changed her academic major at K-State several times — she had majors in accounting, marketing and interior design before graduating with a bachelor's degree in apparel and textiles in 2006.

Camille, 26, now works as a freelance photographer who travels the U.S. and the world with her husband, John Nolan, lead singer and songwriter for Straylight Run. Straylight Run performed in May 2007 at K-State for Union Program Council's Spring Fest.

Photography has allowed Camille to pursue her natural creative side, she said. During the last three years, Camille has photographed her daily surroundings.

"There's something very sentimental about having pictures," Camille said. "I can look back and remember being at a coffee shop that I wouldn't have remembered otherwise."

Music videos also are another art form Camille recently worked with. In one night, Camille and John filmed the music video for Straylight Run's song "Button Down." She also filmed, directed and edited the videos for "The Miracle That Never Came" and "How Do I Fix My Head."

After she met John at a Straylight Run concert in 2005, the couple dated for about six months before Camille moved to New York. When she moved to New York in 2006, Camille said she worked in styling for photo shoots at VH1. While the job featured exciting, fast-paced work, Camille said she appealed more to other aspects of the shoots.

"I was dressing the model, and I was more interested in what the photographer was doing in using lighting and setups," Camille said. "It made me realize how badly I really wanted to become a photographer."

Camille now lives in Lawrence, and she frequently travels with her husband and Straylight Run. She said she enjoys every aspect about traveling.

"It's important to travel, and it's really changed my perspective on life," Camille said. "You get more culture that way. Traveling between states can show you a different culture and a whole different way of life."

Camille said she aspires to have her art displayed in museums or galleries one day. In her short-term professional career, Camille said she would like to open her own studio with commercial and creative photography.

Zoe Gill, Camille's sister and senior in dietetics, said Camille has a critical eye for finding beautiful details in everyday life.

"She works really hard at finding new techniques for making her pictures better," Zoe said. "She has a natural eye, but she works hard to make it better. I've seen tons of improvement in her pictures from when she started until now."

Sarah Gill, Camille's mother, said Camille took photographs while in 4-H and photographed limestone buildings and old buildings around their rural Leonardville, Kan., residence. Camille's photographs have captured spontaneous family moments like sledding during Christmas time, Sarah said.

"It's tied in with being artistic and creative and trying to see the beauty in things," Sarah said. "She's found it

SGA president prepares for term completion

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the race for the new Student Governing Association presidency continues, current student body president Matt Wagner is preparing for the end of his year-long term.

Wagner said April 3 will be his final day as SGA president. Wagner, fifth-year student in management information systems, said he is looking forward to his May graduation and working for ConocoPhillips' global information services department in Bartlesville, Okla.

Wagner's "KSYOU" campaign focused on eliminating the study-abroad application fee, creating an online textbook database, implementing a new dead week policy and creating a financial-planning center for students.

The study-abroad fee was eliminated only two weeks after Wagner took office, and the textbook database was online in June, but the other two issues are still in the works, Wagner said.

SGA members are working with Faculty Senate to make changes to dead-week policies and seeking out corporate sponsorship for the financial-planning center, Wagner said.

Besides the struggle of trying to please the entire campus, Wagner said his biggest challenge as SGA president has been dealing with the time it takes to accomplish goals within the university setting.

"Often times, I'll get e-mails or students coming by requesting things that sometimes we just can't work out within a year," Wagner said.

Wagner said he is confident both the dead-week policy and financial-planning center projects will be completed, and he wished he could have seen them take full effect while in office.

"That's the biggest fear I have right now, is letting go and moving on and not seeing these items through the completion, but also understanding that in the time frame of the university setting; it takes much longer than anticipated to meet goals," Wagner said.

Wagner's vice president, Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, said Wagner has been dependable in his leadership role.

"He's definitely taken the initiative to get everything done that comes up, even more than just working on our platform issues this year," Peele said. "He's really done a great job at taking the lead on different projects and doing what he can to see that different goals get accomplished."

Wagner was hesitant to praise his own term.

"I would say it's gone well, but I'll leave that to others to determine – the student body and faculty, staff, administration," he said.

Jim Mosimann, senior in political science and economics, came in second to Wagner in last year's SGA presidential race. Despite the past rivalry, Mosimann said he approved of Wagner's performance as president.

"I think that he's done very well, and he's accomplished a number of issues that we felt were very important during the campaign," Mosimann said.

Those issues include the online textbook listing as well as the recreation-complex expansion, week-long Thanksgiving break and increasing the number of designated student parking spots in the new K-State Student Union parking garage, Mosimann said.

Running for president was far from Wagner's first experience in student government. He served as an SGA intern as a freshman, governmental relations director as a sophomore and Privilege Fee Committee chairman as a junior and senior, Wagner said.

Gayle Spencer, assistant dean of student life, has known Wagner since his first day of involvement in SGA, she said.

"I think he's been fan-

Matt Wagner, student body president, said one of the biggest accomplishments during his term has been building strong relationships.

tastic," Spencer said. "He's worked well with administration and represented students well here and with the board of regents."

Wagner said building a strong relationship with university administration has been one of the biggest accomplishments of his term.

"We've been able to work many things out that I think have been left untouched in the last few years," Wagner said. "As a student government as a whole we've become closer with the administration, and they trust us and they invest in us that much more."

Wagner's advice to future SGA presidents also deals with these relationships.

"Make sure that you build that connection with your constituents and faculty and the administration as quickly as possible at the beginning of your term," Wagner said. "Those are the individuals that will help you ultimately succeed in a position, and it's not something you can do alone."

Though serving as SGA president has taken up more time than he expected, Wagner said he has not ruled out getting into politics again someday.

"In the future, I could see maybe a future in politics – in a city or community aspect," he said.

SGA makes decisions, acts as student voice

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the Student Governing Association elections fast approaching, it is important for student voters to be aware of the role that SGA plays in day-to-day campus life.

"SGA is important because we really are the voice of the students to the administrators," said Lydia Peele, student body vice president. "If they have any concerns or something they want to see, then they ask SGA."

This year alone, SGA has made several important decisions that will affect the next several years of K-State student life. The expansion of the Peters Recreation Complex, tuition rates and privilege fees are just a few of the many areas in which the association has influenced.

Each year, the student government is given about $15 million to work with and allocate across campus.

The money can be used in many different areas, from improving the Lafene Health Center to generating publicity for the Recreation Complex expansion.

"I think that realizing the dollar amounts that are spent throughout the university is one of the largest 'Aha' moments [for students]," said Matt Wagner, student body president. "Fifteen million dollars is a lot of money that student government has control over. I think that would be the most critical to students; but also, just the daily life in general."

Wagner, senior in management information systems, said the members of SGA participate in a parking council that works every week with students to remedy complaints. Members are also working to dis-tribute parking stalls in the garage that is being built in front of the K-State Student Union.

"I think that student government has a lot of control over what happens on campus pertaining to students and how much students are able to contribute to the university, as well as how much money is spent where by the university," Wagner said.

Peele, senior in math education, said it is important for students to take special interest in student government because of the weight that SGA decisions carry. Not only are members working throughout campus, but they also work with the Board of Regents and are preparing to make a national lobby for higher education in Washington D.C.

"It's really more than what just goes on here at K-State," Peele said. "The student government is really the go-to people for the students and on the national level as well."

With such a great number of correspondents to work with, the student government's allocation committee labors to help campus organizations travel, coordinate speakers and bring diversity to the students.

"I think they're constantly attending meetings and working with lots of people on campus and across the state to represent the interests of students and that goes on all the time," said Gayle Spencer, Assistant Dean of Student Life. "I don't think many students realize how hard it is and how much work they do, and that we have serious candidates here to make K-State a better place for the students."

PARKING | 3 options being explored to decide on student parking spots

parking garage sub-committee, which is to be presented this month, includes 500 student parking spaces, 400 spaces for faculty and staff, 300 spaces for hourly-rate parking and 134 for reserved parking, Peele said.

The parking garage sub-committee is in the process of meeting with a technology company called Ski-Data to decide how students will be able to access the new parking garage, Peele said.

She said there are three options being explored at this time.

The first option would be to open up the student spaces in the parking garage to those with an "O" parking pass. The second option is students would be required to have a separate, new-technology parking pass for the new garage. The third option is students with an "O" parking pass would have to pay half price to use the new garage.

STUDENT, FACULTY SACRIFICES

Dean of student life Pat Bosco praised parking services for the accommodations they have made to aid the current parking shortage situation, particularly concerning parents and prospective students coming to Manhattan for campus visits.

"Parking services has done an excellent job to use the shuttle program to aid with parents coming up for visits," he said. "Completion of the new parking garage will be a great boom for K-State Student Union."

However, some students and faculty have negative feelings concerning the new parking garage.

"I think it is in the way and isn't going to benefit us," said Rebecca Smith, senior in applied music.

But until the garage is done, those who do not live close enough to walk to campus will continue to experience the stress of driving in and out of stalls trying to find parking or planning extra time to ride the shuttle.

"I can always find a parking space, just not close to where I need to go," said graduate student in English Rachel Parkin.

Parkin said that a closer parking space would increase her time on campus, but it might help improve her mood.

"I might be a little nicer when I got [to campus] if I didn't have freezing cold fingers that were too numb to type," she said.

Parkin has to park in the "T" parking lot, which is located across the street from Moore Hall.

She walks to the English and Counseling Services building located behind Hale Library in the center of campus.

Parkin said she thought that the new parking garage might help the parking shortage a little bit, but it won't solve it.

MARROW | No cost in being a donor

they can survive," he said.

The couple is on a mission, he said.

"I felt something needed to be done; if we could do anything to help we were going to do it," he said.

The Bria T. Chism Foundation has traveled to many college campuses in Missouri and Kansas to get young minorities interested in registering to be a donor.

He said they have been working closely with historically black fraternities and sororities, like Zeta Phi Beta, to achieve this demographic.

"They have been very helpful and very willing to come forward to register," Chism said.

The foundation not only registers donors, but they also serve as support groups for families who are experiencing financial hardship due to expensive hospital bills or educating families affected by the diseases that would cause a need for a marrow transplant about their options available for finding a match, he said.

Chism encourages all students, but specifically minorities of African-American, Latino, American Indian, multi-race, Asian and Hawaiian and Pacific Islander descent, to become registered, stressing that as a donor there is no cost and the recipient pays for all of the costs.

According to the National Marrow Donor Program Web site, because tissue types are inherited, patients are more likely to match someone from their own race or ethnicity.

Adding more donors from diverse racial and ethnic backgrounds increases the likelihood that all patients will find the match they need.

On any given day, more than 6,000 men, women and children are searching the National Marrow Donor Program (NMDP) Registry for a life-saving donor.

These patients have leukemia, lymphoma and other life-threatening diseases that can be treated by a bone marrow or cord blood transplant. For many of these patients, a transplant may be the best and only hope of a cure.

One reward besides saving someone's life is the donor can actually meet the person receiving their marrow.

After one year this can be made possible, Chism said.

"It is a tremendous thing to do," he said. "You have the opportunity to save someone's life."

Less parking prompts fewer tickets

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

The little yellow envelopes are like an eyesore plastered to the windshield of the unsuspecting.

They act as beacons, calling students who pass to snicker at the latest violator of campus parking regulations.

These small flyers are placed in windshield wipers by one of 12 parking control officers. The officers, who work just a few at a time, are never working the same schedule. Darwin Abbott, director of University Parking Services, said that the schedule of the officers depends on class schedules, obligations and other time constraints that the officers might have.

This means that it is nearly impossible to predict when the next control officer might pass by an illegally -parked vehicle.

"You will have a few [parking control officers] working at a time," Abbott said. "We start in the morning and it goes at night because we get complaints from the residence halls. We go at night just because we don't want that filling up with people who don't live there. We pass through the center of campus just looking for anything weird."

The residence halls are the most frequently patrolled area, Abbott said.

Many complaints come from students in the halls who feel that parking spaces are being overrun by students who do not have valid permits.

"The ticket that's written most often is for not having a valid permit," Abbott said. "If you're parked in a faculty or staff lot with a student permit, that would be an incorrect permit and that's a $50 ticket."

Having an invalid permit used to cost students $18. However, Abbott said that students on the Council on Parking Activities voted to raise the fine because many students would become repeat offenders.

They would park illegally time and time again and never end up accumulating a bill that matched the price of a parking permit, Abbott said.

One common misconception is that K-State Police play a part in issuing tickets.

Though K-State Police often patrol the campus lots, they do not participate in the writing of tickets.

"We do not issue tickets for the most part," said Capt. Don Stubbings of K-State Police. "We do supplemental parking services when necessary, but it's not a normal service."

Though tickets persist to decorate windshields, assistant vice president of parking services Gary Leitnaker said that certain changes made because of a lack of parking in front of the K-State Student Union has actually decreased the number of tickets given across campus.

"I think what's helped this year is the shuttle," Leitnaker said. "People really like the shuttle. It was put in the first day of school and it has never been used before, with the exception of a shuttle between here and the Foundation. It's there to replace parking in front of the Union."

Though the shuttle has eased the pain of parking tickets, Leitnaker said funding has not been set in place to continue running it next year.

MEN | Crowd big factor in loss

Beasley added 11 rebounds and notched his 25th double-double of the season Saturday. The mark ties the all-time Big 12 record held by former Kansas player Drew Gooden. Both Young and freshman forward Bill Walker added nine points to the Wildcat effort and Stewart had six. The disproportionate scoring figures weren't at all disheartening to Martin.

"When we get other guys shots, people complain Mike doesn't get the ball enough," he said. "We get Mike 23 shots and I have to sit here and explain why we're not letting Mike shoot. For us to succeed in high-level games like this game tonight, we've got to have more balance. There's no doubt about that."

Coming up big for Kansas was Rush, who had 21, including five of nine from three-point range. Sophomore guard Sherron Collins had 18 and senior guard Russell Robinson had 14. Both Jackson and Arthur had 10. KU out-rebounded K-State 41-34, including 23 offensive rebounds.

Kansas coach Bill Self said the crowd, which was a big factor when the Jayhawks visited Manhattan, didn't disappoint Saturday.

"The crowd was great," he said. "That makes such a big difference. We don't take our crowd for granted at all, but we don't get this type of energy in this building but a couple times a year. Now was a great time to have it."

K-State is on a four-game losing streak with two games to go before the Big 12 Tournament. The Wildcats' NCAA Tournament résumé includes California, Texas A&M, Oklahoma and Kansas. Martin said sitting at third place in the Big 12 should be enough for a bid.

"We're tied for third place," he said. "I think Baylor has the knot on us right now. We've got two games to go. Our résumé is pretty strong. We've got to re-energize ourselves and go in there and play our hearts out."

WOMEN | Lehning leads with 21

K-State (20-8, 12-3 Big 12 Conference) trailed the Tigers 15-14 with 9:41 left in the first half. The Wildcats took the lead with a 21-2 run over a span of nearly seven minutes. Lehning led the run with seven points. K-State led 39-22 at halftime.

The Tigers (9-19, 2-13 Big 12) pulled within 12 points with 9:41 left in the game. The Wildcats opened up another big run to cut off the Missouri comeback attempt.

Lehning scored 21 points and pulled down 11 rebounds to record her 11th career double-double. Junior forward Marlies Gipson scored 13 and sophomore forward Ashley Sweat added 13 points in the win.

Patterson said the Wildcats have made adjustments this season to become a Big 12 contender, after starting the year with a 8-5 non-conference record.

"I don't know that I've had the opportunity to watch a team go on the road in Big 12 play and be as tough-minded as this team was in so many close, tough games against teams that are ranked," Patterson said. "It's been an amazingly impressive season to this point in time, watching them become who they are continuing to become and watching them be who they were."

MARIJUANA | Legislation rejected

from a physician means a physician-signed document who also is in good standing with the state board of healing arts, according to the proposed Senate bill.

A COLLABORATIVE EFFORT

With Former Kansas Attorney Gen. Robert Stephan as their legal consultant, the Kansas Compassionate Care Coalition testified before the Kansas Senate Committee on Health Care Strategies on Feb. 11 in support of the proposed legislation.

The Kansas Compassionate Care Coalition has existed for about a year-and-a-half, said Laura Green, coalition director. The coalition has about 850 members, including cancer patients, their family members, doctors, nurses and caregivers.

Stephan's press conference about medicinal marijuana at the State Capitol in August 2007 developed an interest about the proposed legislation, Green said.

"With his involvement, we were able to bring it to the legislature," Green said. "I don't think we would have been able to advance our bill without his support, especially in an election year."

Stephan, who served as Kansas attorney general from 1979-95, said in a telephone interview that he supports only the medicinal uses for marijuana. He said under the proposed legislation, patients who use marijuana for medicinal purposes could still be charged with a crime. However, if a judge finds that the marijuana had been recommended for medical purposes, Stephan said the person in possession of marijuana would have a defense for it.

Stephan has supported medicinal marijuana for 25 years and the reclassification of marijuana from a Schedule I drug to a Schedule II drug.

Schedule I drugs have a high potential for abuse and have no currently accepted medicinal use in treatment in the U.S. Schedule II drugs have a high potential for abuse along with a currently accepted medical use treatment in the U.S. or currently accepted medical use with severe restrictions, according to the DEA's Web site.

During his testimony before the Senate Committee on Health Care Strategies, Stephan said he visited cancer patients for 15 years in Topeka and Wichita hospitals. He said some patients told him they resorted to marijuana as a last resort to relieve their nausea.

"I hope these people who oppose medicinal marijuana never have to suffer like the people I have seen and talked with and the people who use it as a last resort," Stephan said a telephone interview. "If I was a researcher, I'd probably say, 'May God have mercy on their souls.'"

Stephan said he will continue to advocate medicinal marijuana use and proposed legislation in its support.

On May 15, 2007, DEA Administrative Law Judge Mary Ellen Bittner submitted her recommendation to the DEA's deputy administrator that stated she found it is "in the public interest" to end the federal monopoly on the marijuana supply that could be used in FDA-approved research.

"If we can get enough states, its passage will send a message to the DEA and federal government to reclassify it and allow for further research," Stephan said. "Even the opponents say further research is needed, but they know darn well that adequate marijuana cannot be produced for research, so they're talking through both sides of their mouths."

Green said coalition members plan to reintroduce the bill during the 2009 Kansas legislative session.

"That's very disappointing for us that they wouldn't take the vote in the committee to advance the bill," she said. "We'll hope that whatever committee it goes through next year that they'll have the political willpower to at least hold a vote in the committee."

A MEDICAL PERSPECTIVE

Dr. Eric Voth, a medical director at Stormont-Vail Health-Care in Topeka, is the chairman of The Institute on Global Drug Policy. Voth has more than 30 years of experience as an authority on drug use. He said medicinal marijuana is bad medicine because of its THC ranges.

THC levels in available marijuana range from 2 percent to 30 percent, Voth said. Because of this range, Voth said marijuana has a very narrow therapeutic window for pain relief — lower levels have no effect on pain while THC levels above a certain point intensifies pain, he said.

According to a recommendation from National Academy Press in 1999, clinical trials of marijuana for medical purposes should be conducted under limited circumstances, including the following: trials should involve only short-term marijuana use of less than six months; be conducted in patients with conditions for which there is a reasonable expectation of efficacy; be approved by institutional review boards; and collect data about efficacy.

Voth said the FDA should take precedent in its establishment of drug policies instead of the legislative process.

"There's a tremendous amount of emotion with marijuana that's making people not think clearly," he said.

According to the U.S. Department of Justice Web site, a pharmaceutical product called Marinol is widely available through prescription as a pill. Marinol's active ingredient is synthetic THC, which has been found to relieve nausea and vomiting associated with chemotherapy with cancer patients and loss of appetite with AIDS patients, according to the department's Web site.

OTHER STATES' POLICIES

Laws that effectively remove state-level criminal penalties for growing or possessing medical marijuana now exist in 12 states, including New Mexico. A bill in support of medicinal marijuana passed the New Mexico state legislature and received Gov. Bill Richardson's support in spring 2007.

New Mexico Rep. John Heaton, D-Carlsbad, said he "vehemently opposes" the legislation. Heaton, a pharmacist, said marijuana is a weak painkiller and anti-nauseant. He also said the issue supersedes the FDA and its drug-approval process.

"Legalizing one more drug in our society is now what we need to be doing as policy-makers; we should be doing just the opposite," Heaton said. "We have a national organization that approves or disapproves dr

Student enjoys eclectic mix of hobbies, transportation

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dany Majard came from France, studied in Montreal and New Zealand, and is now earning his doctoral degree in math at K-State. Despite his longing for a little "culture" in Manhattan, he has found plenty to do around here. Riding a tandem bike, learning how to juggle fire and playing hockey with K-State's club team have kept Majard busy during his first year here.

When did you come to K-State?

Last January. It was kind of funny because they don't have training for teaching assistants in the spring, so I got to teach right away.

What do you want to do after earning your degree?

I want to do research. Some organizations are founded by the state, and the people who work there do fundamental things, and they're paid for it. They are not linked to any universities. In France, it's called CNRS. It's really hard to get into it, though. I really don't know where I'll end up going. I'll go where my job takes me. That's how I landed here.

Where did you go to school before coming here?

I got a master's degree in theoretical physics in France. The structure of it is really different from here. We don't have any teaching duties, we don't have any research ... we just take classes the whole time, except for the last three or four months where we have an internship of full-time research. I did the first internship in Montreal, and the second in New Zealand. Then my adviser in New Zealand decided to quit, so I contacted people in other countries [to pursue a doctoral degree]. The best option was actually here.

Don't you have a tandem

bike?

Yes, I rode one in Tokyo. A friend was going back there for a month, so I asked my brother if he wanted to go, like, three days before we left. He said, "Sure, I have the money. Let's go." So we went, and it was a lot of fun. Every summer they close the imperial gardens [in Tokyo] and rent out bikes to people for free and let people ride around the gardens. And when I came here, I was looking for a bike because I was walking a lot. I saw this one on Facebook.com and I thought to myself, "If I don't buy one now, then I'll never actually buy one." So I contacted these people and bought it. This girl had gotten it from her grandparents who said she didn't visit them as often as they wanted. But she didn't

3-man fight starts at Pita Pit

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One man required a hospital visit after a physical altercation at Pita Pit early Saturday morning, according to Riley County Police reports.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said Gerardo Melara, 21, of Fort Riley, sustained injuries to his face during a fight at Pita Pit, 1131 Moro St., that reportedly became physical after Melara allegedly threw a Pita Pit bar stool, hitting Steven Burch, 23, also of Fort Riley, and Gabriel Harper, 28, graduate student in economics.

According to RCPD reports, Burch and Harper then chased Melara down and allegedly beat him around the head and face with their fists, until an RCPD officer broke up the altercation.

Melara was treated at Mercy Regional Health Center for a large gash above one of his eyes and another gash around his nose and eye socket, according to reports. He has since been released from the hospital.

Moldrup said Harper was arrested for battery, and Burch was arrested on aggravated battery charges. Both men's bonds were set at $500. An aggravated battery report also was filed against Melara.

Webinar discusses sexual orientations

About 20 K-State student advisers stared at slides as they appeared on a large projector screen at the front of the small, darkened room. One slide flashed the correct definition for "bisexual," the next the explanation for the term "queer."

These advisers were viewing a Webinar titled "Shared Responsibilities: What Advisers and Administrators Need to Know to Better Assist GLBTQA [Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgendered, Questioning and Allied] students."

The Webinar was presented Feb. 7 in the K-State Student Union Room 212 by the National Academic Advising Association and the College of Education, said Mike Lynch, associate vice

Presidential candidates participate in forum, answer audience questions

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The candidates for student body president answered questions about their ambitions and platforms Monday night in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr, senior in electrical engineering, answered questions in a different manner than usual, without a pirate accent.

"If we were up there slicing and dicing the ninja threat, it would be 'avast ye scurvy dogs and walk the plank', but from the neck down we're in suits," Schurr said. "We can't just go in there and run everyone through with a cutlass or with pistols and shoot them and tell them to surrender the booty. Telling somebody to surrender the booty in this would really be taken the wrong way, especially since the opposition is female."

Lydia Peele, senior in math education, said Schurr surprised her with the non-pirate accent.

"I'm not sure what he's doing," she said. "I think he's trying to show a different side of who he is to the students who came here."

Despite Schurr's goal to increase voter turnout by bringing humor to Student Governing Association elections, fewer people voted during the primaries this year compared to previous elections.

Peele said she isn't sure why that happened, but said it might be different for the general elections, which start

Nobel winner gives demonstration

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Albert Einstein's early 20th century theories still apply to time-keeping accuracy in the 21st century, said a physicist and Nobel laureate Monday afternoon.

William D. Phillips, a fellow of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, presented "Time and Einstein in the 21st Century: The Coolest Stuff in the Universe" to a full room of K-State students, faculty and community members at the K-State Alumni Center.

Audience members laughed as Phillips poured liquid nitrogen on tables and the carpeted floor. The liquid instantly boiled because of its cool temperature relative to room temperature.

Phillips performed a series of experiments to explain laser cooling and heating and their importance to atomic clocks.

"Einstein showed that both space and time were things that depended on who was looking at them," Phillips said.

During the early 1900s, Einstein defined time as what a clock measures, Phillips said. A clock is something that ticks, providing a periodic uniform series of events, Phillips said. Examples of clocks throughout history include the rotating earth and a swinging pendulum, he said.

Such mechanical clocks, though, are imperfect, Phillips said. The length of a pendulum swing might stretch or shrink with temperature changes, while each quartz watch is made differently, he said.

The earth's rotations even vary with different currents, Phillips said. However, atomic clocks are accurate because every cesium-133 atom in the world is identical.

Atomic fountain clocks, which use fountain-like movements of atoms to measure frequencies and time intervals, are the most accurate timepieces ever made, Phillips said.

Phillips said atom-

William D. Phillips gives a demonstration of the physical effects of extreme cold on matter by dipping a rose into a vial of liquid nitrogen and then shattering it on the ground. Phillips, a 1997 Nobel Prize winner spoke Monday in the K-State Alumni Center on "Time and Einstein in the 21st Century: the Coolest Stuff in the Universe."

ic clocks are important for modern Global Positioning System, which is a Global Navigation Satellite System. He also said atomic clocks in satellites guide vehicles, planes, backpackers and military vehicles.

"Today, without an understanding of the results of general relativity, the Global Positioning System would be off by kilometers," Phillips said.

The future of atomic clocks includes more accurate clocks, tests of the fundamental understanding of nature, quantum computers and other scientific aspects that have yet to be discovered, Phillips said.

Along with Steven Chu and Claude Cohen-Tannoudji, Phillips shared the 1997 Nobel Prize for physics because of their work in developing methods to cool and trap atoms with laser light. He also serves as a university distinguished professor of physics at the University of Maryland.

Phillips also has familial ties at K-State. His brother, Tom Phillips, has served as head of the Department of Entomology and Plant Pathology since July 2007.

During the question-and-answer period, an audience member asked Phillips what kind of watch he wears because of his fascination with time.

"As a government employee, I cannot endorse a specific watch brand," Phillips said with a laugh. "But I do wear a digital Quartz watch."

Dependency's demand

Ethanol changing future of consumers' gasoline needs

In the five minutes it takes you to read this column, the United States will consume 70,000 barrels of oil. According to the Energy Information Administration, we burn 6.2 billion gallons of oil in a single day. Our insatiable appetite for petroleum, which is both expensive and finite, has economists and scientists worried.

JOE VOSSEN

Where will we turn when the oil wells run dry? When will the price of crude oil finally prove too expensive to run our cars, produce our plastics and manufacture our chemicals? In the debate over energy and carbon emissions, an unlikely hero has emerged in corn-based ethanol.

The hoopla surrounding ethanol has been hard to ignore. Farmers, venture capitalists, politicians and even energy companies have pointed to ethanol as the fuel of the future. The prospects of ethanol are indeed alluring. The clean-burning, home-grown gasoline substitute has the potential to reduce our dependence on foreign oil, decrease the amount of dangerous carbons entering our atmosphere, jumpstart struggling economies in rural America and begin the next revolution in technology and industry: The biofuel age.

my. There are eight ethanol plants in the state, with construction price tags ranging from $60 million to $200 million. The Kansas Energy Information Network reported that four more plants are under construction, and another 22 are being proposed. From Finney County in the southwest to Atchison County in the northeast, ethanol plants are spending millions of dollars buying fuel, feed, water and labor from rural Kansas communities — an economic stimulus for areas with falling populations and fewer employment opportunities.

More ethanol plants mean more demand for corn, the grain whose starches are converted into sugars and fermented into ethyl alcohol, or ethanol.

Fred Cholick, dean of the College of Agriculture, said higher demand for grain, coupled with a worldwide food shortage, has led to higher corn prices. Though the jump in prices has profited the Kansas corn producer, Cholick said not everyone is singing ethanol's praises.

"Higher prices of commodities — corn and sorghum in this case — all have very positive influences for the local farmer," Cholick said. "The other side of it is, the users of those products domestically — here in Kansas it's the beef industry, the feedlots and the swine industry — are paying more to feed their animals corn. They are in a squeeze."

Corn futures traded at more than $5.50 per bushel at the Chicago Board of Trade last week, up from an average of $2 per bushel in the early 2000s. More corn is being developed nations which have less-disposable income and a greater need for our surplus grain. Less wheat is planted when corn is more profitable; Cholick said the average Kansas wheat base has dropped from 14 million acres to just less than 10 million acres last year.

There are signs that the ethanol bubble is fragile. The ethanol industry's aggressive expansion into Midwestern states in the last five years, where labor is cheap and corn is plentiful, is showing signs of slowing down. According to a Feb. 26 article in USA Today, Cargill recently scrapped plans for a $200 million ethanol plant outside Topeka. Cargill cited poor economic conditions and, ironically, the rising cost of corn.

Before Kansas and the rest of the country completely embrace ethanol as the answer to our oil addiction, we must build a smarter strategy to expand the industry. The current high corn prices and ethanol euphoria might be the boom-and-bust years of biofuels. The industry has yet to prove itself both as an efficient alternative to oil and as a stable industry for the economies of Kansas and the nation.

Does ethanol deserve all the attention? To completely answer such a question is beyond the scope of one column. In the coming weeks, I will address the environmental effects of ethanol, and the research being done to improve its efficiency and production.

The future of ethanol is bright, but like any infant industry, there is room for improvement. The initial excitement has given way to growing pains, but Cholick said ethanol has the potential to not only revolutionize agriculture, but shape the 21st century.

"For the local community, in terms of jobs and construction, ethanol has a very positive impact," Cholick said. "As we go through this adjustment period, parts of a community's economy will be adversely impacted. The long-term forecast is positive. Over the short term, we'll have bumps in the road."

TO THE POINT

Thanks, seniors

The last four years, we've watched senior guard Clint Stewart play basketball. In recent years, we've seen the addition of forward David Hoskins, guard Blake Young and guard James Franklin. All four have made a mark on K-State basketball as the team works to climb to the top.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Stewart came to the team directly from Union High School in Tulsa, Okla. He started all 29 games during the 2004-05 campaign and added 31 minutes to the bench that also included Jeremiah Massey, Lance Harris and Cartier Martin. He averaged five points per game, including 31 percent from beyond the arc.

Hoskins was a 2005-06 addition who made an immediate effect in the game scores. Hoskins' 13 points per game was second on the team and 21 starts helped. Both Hoskins and Stewart were part of the team that led K-State past KU, 59-55, in Lawrence, Kan.

Blake Young has brought intensity to the Wildcat bench. He has really made a splash this year with his toughness: first during the Jan. 30 KU game, when he had to receive stitches to his eyebrow following the game, then during the March 1 KU game, when he left the floor limping slightly, then came back in the game four minutes later. He saw action in all 35 games last year and made a team-high 41 steals during the season.

Franklin came with former coach Bob Huggins last year after transferring to K-State from Cowley County Community College. The lone Kansan on the team, Franklin has seen the court ten times this season, averaging four minutes per game and has scored seven points.

To all the seniors: thank you for your contributions to the team. Whether you were here for all four years, or lent support to your team from the bench, we appreciate everything you've given us.

Change in leadership brings Cuba into U.S. news spotlight

This past week was one for the record books when it comes to breaking down international barriers and moving one step closer to uniting the nations of our planet.

Three significant events took place this week, and if you haven't had a chance to tune in to the news, here is a recap: First, the New York Philharmonic became the first American music group in more than half a century to perform in North Korea. The group performed pieces like "An American in Paris" and "From the New World" for an audience of prominent Communists, a bold move on their part.

Another event of even greater international significance was the rekindling of the old feud in the Balkans between the ethnic Albanians and the Serbs. A little more than a week ago, Kosovo declared its independence from Serbia as an act of self-determination. The majority of the West supported this move, but a few nations have submitted objections since then.

And the third news-making event is former Cuban dictator Fidel Castro's abdication of his rule over the island nation to his younger brother, Raúl.

Because proximity is the only American criterion for awareness, siphoning attention away from all of this has been a mindless dialogue on the retirement — or rather, the abdication — of Fidel Castro in favor of his brother, Raúl. While the general question, "When did leadership of any kind of Republic become an inherited position?" might be both relevant and valid, we must not allow ourselves to be distracted by the media's heat-seeking flashbulbs; post-USSR, this event is of very little historical significance.

Now, let's be distinct; the liberty of the Cuban people obviously is important, and the case has always deserved more thoughtful consideration than it has received. In fact, given that now all the original egos of this little war are out of the picture, it's de rigueur to at least temporarily suspend our Cold War-era assumptions and re-examine the situation in modernity. But is this what has happened? Of course not. Actual discussion of the logistics of new diplomacy has been meager in comparison to the masturbatory antics of the media, who have mostly prattled on about aborted anniversaries, the ends of eras and the younger Castro's "momentous decision."

The reality is more complicated, frustrating and sobering; in exchange for any hope of relations, the United States has continued to insist on a laundry list of concessions from Cuba, beginning with the wholesale abandonment of state socialism in favor of liberal democracy. Cuba, of course, always has responded by both rejecting the United States' implicit mandate for oversight and demanding total autonomy with their objectionable internal affairs as a prerequisite for negotiation. Neither side has the inherent desire for compromise or the need for capitulation, and both have a significant amount of national pride at stake. So why are we continually so surprised at the depth of this particular stalemate?

Perhaps because no one realizes just how little effort has been made. On her 2005 short list of "outposts of tyranny," Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice singled out Cuba — while omitting without apology ghoulish Saudi Arabia and others — and John Bolton, former ambassador to the United Nations, accused the island nation of harboring weapons of mass destruction, a statement which doesn't require — but surely benefits from — a witty postscript.

Meanwhile, Raúl deliberately has made clear that he has no interest in reprising Mikhail Gorbachev; on the contrary, it's business as usual in Havana, with Castro even proposing before the National Assembly that they "include Fidel" on important decisions, a resolution which, to no one's surprise, passed unanimously.

In other words, don't expect for either Havana or Washington, D.C., to blink. This "end of an era" business is nothing more than a frivolous cliché, and it shall take much more than evocative rhetoric to soothe the dysfunction.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

So, it's raining outside, and I can't mountain bike, so I just mountain bike inside.

It seems we live in a society where all plural nouns mean breasts.

A giant ice bomb just demolished my hand.

To the jean shorts guy: It's not too late to invest in a quality pair of pants.

My friend just ate a penny.

I'm seeing more unicorns now that leprechauns are extinct.

So much for beating KU in Africa.

If I vote Democratic, will they stop this global warming?

Fourum: I could only think of one person to drink dial, and it was you.

Don't be such a product of sums, man.

To the girls in 538 Ford Hall: Seriously, what are you doing up there?

Dick Vitale: You were so annoying during the game, I put you on mute so I could still

There's a person playing bagpipes outside of Haymaker. Freaking epic.

I just bought a peacock so I could kill it.

I just saw one of those little Gator things they use to clean things up, go like 30 and spin out on the ice. It was amazing.

What's with all the old people at the rec?

Group hug.

Hey, Collegian: Were you so stoned that you couldn't even put the last sentence in on the medical marijuana article?

To the guy in Eisenhower who always wears the Western Illinois sweatshirt: You have a nice smile. Do you have a girlfriend?

It's not very classy to see a cat sneaking out of a room late at night naked.

To the guy with the deer head tied to the roof of his car: Are you serious?

You might be a redneck if you have a deer skull tied to the roof of your car.

Spring break is in 14 days, 22 hours, 13 minutes and 22 seconds. Bye.

I make a motion that the campus pay us to kill the birds. Do I have a second?

Ha. I beat you by one honk.

Is it weird that I have names for all the toilets in our floor bathroom?

Somebody told me how scary it was how much topsoil we're losing each year. I told that story around a campfire and nobody got scared.

Kansas weather and I have a lot in common: We're both bipolar.

I believe we should make the world safe for our children, but not our children's children, because I don't think children should be having sex.

Beasley, Kent read Seuss to local 5th graders

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mrs. Miller's fifth grade class might not forget Dr. Seuss' birthday ever again, thanks in part to the K-State men's basketball team.

BEASLEY

Freshman Michael Beasley and Junior Darren Kent stopped by Bluemont Elementary on Monday to celebrate Dr. Seuss' birthday and hang out with students.

The class, which included Beasley's younger brother, Malik Smith, was not surprised when Beasley and Kent walked in. Smith tipped the class off earlier, but that did not stop looks of awe and wonder from greeting the players when they entered the room.

"We want to get involved in younger kids' lives," Kent said. "We know that the young community is involved in coming to our games and supporting the team. We wanted to give back and get involved in their lives."

Beasley, Kent and a student from the class took turns reading "Green Eggs and Ham." After the book was finished, the students asked the players questions about various topics, some of which included basketball.

"The players talked about things like working hard, being a team player," Kathy Stitt, principal of Bluemont Elementary said. "They did a fantastic job with the kids."

Stitt said they wanted to make the day special and have some local celebrities come in to talk to the class.

After the question-and-answer session was completed, the class went to the gym to participate in a shoot around.

"Each of the players shot 10 free throws, and the class did a math exercise with mean, median and mode," Stitt said.

In addition to the free-throw competition, Kent and Beasley had a dunk competition.

"We're just average guys, just basketball players, but when they look at you ... It's fun to hang out with them and talk with them for a while," Kent said.

CITY COMMISSION

Council to vote on projects to improve campus, city

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city commission will vote to approve seven special projects tonight at City Hall. These projects will mutually benefit K-State and the city of Manhattan.

According to the agenda, the items up for approval include building sidewalks to and from Hale Library, improving lighting along the walkway between Campus Creek Road and Petticoat Lane; building six map kiosks around campus to help students; constructing a fountain and plaza at the University Gardens Project; and the "Good Neighbors" Program continuing on and off campus.

Commissioner Bob Strawn said the projects were approved last year.

The city will oversee improvements on Denison Avenue from Anderson to Kimball avenues, according to the agenda. The project includes widening Denison Avenue to include a turning lane from Elaine Drive to Kimball Avenue and new pavement markings to designate the lanes.

The city will vote on its support of the construction of the National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition and Commercialization building by contributing $50,000 toward the repayment of debt.

Sidewalks will be installed on the south side of Todd Road from Denison Avenue to Jarvis Drive.

"K-State will manage their projects, and someone from the city will manage ours," Strawn said. "But the funds come out of the KSU/City Special Projects Fund set up with tax monies collected in support of K-State."

A presentation will be given tonight on the design of two new fire stations to be built in Manhattan. The fire stations will be designed this year, and construction should begin next year.

The council also will hear a request for financial assistance for the Riley County Seniors' Service Center tonight during the meeting.

The meeting will begin at 6 p.m. instead of the usual time of 7 p.m. in the city commission Room at City Hall.

Wildcats head to San Antonio after wins in Beaumont

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a successful trip to Beaumont, Texas, the K-State baseball team will travel across the Lone Star State to take on the Roadrunners of the University of Texas at San Antonio.

While competing in the Cardinal Classic, the Wildcats were able to get the season mark back to even, winning the final three games of the weekend tournament. The Wildcats will enter the game taking on a team on a winning streak. In their last four games — all victories — the Roadrunners have shelled their opponents for 44 runs. While the opponent appears to be doing well, one player in particular has been the spark plug for the Roadrunners. Junior center fielder Michael Rockett was named one of four players selected as a Louisville Slugger National Player of the Week. Last week, the preseason All-Southland Conference player hit .625 with four doubles, a triple, a home run and nine RBI.

The Wildcats have been anything but lax in the batter's box recently. After struggling offensively in the first three games of the season, the Wildcats turned it around in Beaumont to hammer out 22 runs in the final three games of the Cardinal Classic. The Wildcats have had their own early season standout in freshman infielder Carter Jurica. The young Wildcat has been a shot in the arm recently for a stagnant Wildcat offense. Jurica looks to build on a weekend in which he scored and walked four times, and hit .555. The early season success is no surprise to coach Brad Hill.

"He comes from a great program and area for baseball," Hill said. "He was one of the top players in Texas in high school. This isn't a huge adjustment for him, he's just a good player, very mature for his age, and just takes things in stride."

Last year's offensive leader Byron Wiley has struggled early in the 2008 campaign, but Hill expects him to turn the corner soon.

"He's been a little too selective at the plate, but it's early, and he's going to be fine," Hill said. "He's a great hitter, and great hitters go through slumps."

Picked to finish at the top of the Southland Conference,

Men's golf looks to complement strong fall season with solid spring

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After finishing in the top-10 in all six of their fall contests, including three top-three finishes, the K-State men's golf team will look to build on a strong fall season after improving over the winter.

"We finished the fall season really strong, but I've definitely seen more improvement this off-season," senior Kyle Yonke said.

The Wildcats will begin their spring campaign today, and will travel to Beaumont, Calif., to participate in the Braveheart Classic, where University of California-Riverside will play host. The two-day tournament, which will take place at Oak Valley Golf Club, will start with 36 holes on Monday and conclude with 18 holes on Tuesday.

The tournament will consist of 17 teams, including GolfWeek.com's No. 48-ranked Texas Christian and Barry, the defending Division-II champions. This is the Wildcats' second appearance in the Braveheart Classic in as many years. They placed ninth in the tournament last season.

K-State coach Tim Norris said he thinks the Wildcats are prepared to make a strong start this spring.

"Mentally, this isn't our first tournament," said Norris, who is now in his 11th season as coach. "Physically, yes, it is, but they feel like they've got a pretty good chance to compete."

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Wildcats should be option for NCAA 'Big Dance'

The latest talk around town is the K-State men's basketball team might be in the "Big Dance" for the first time since the 1995-96 season.

At 18-10 overall and 8-6 in Big 12 Conference play, they are easily one of the most widely discussed bubble teams in the nation.

In some opinions, K-State was snubbed last tournament with a 20-win season.

Winning the last two games of regular season play will not guarantee a bid into the field of 65.

However, going two or three games deep into the Big 12 tournament will make it very difficult for the NCAA Selection Committee to not grant them a seven or eight seed in the tournament.

If we do happen to make it into the championship game of the Big 12 tournament, with wins over Kansas and a then-No. 9 ranked Texas A&M team, we could be staring a No. 5 seed in the face.

With two games left in the regular season, wins against Colorado (11-17, 5-11 Big 12) and Iowa State (14-15, 4-10 Big 12), are musts. It is not difficult to tell that we have a problem winning on the road, after only three road wins this season.

Coming into the Colorado game with a four-game losing streak and a disastrous performance in Lawrence on Saturday, we're lucky we're playing host.

Colorado is last place in the Big 12 and seems to be the perfect medicine for a hangover that needs to end Tuesday.

The only real test I see in the Colorado game is containing a solid senior guard in Richard Roby.

Averaging 16.7 points this season and pulling down 6.4 rebounds a game, the Colorado star player seems to be a lock for the NBA draft next season.

On Friday, Colorado announced sophomore guard Xavier Silas was dismissed from the team for unspecified reasons.

The Buffalo guard was the third leading scorer for the Buffaloes, so that does not hurt the chances for a K-State win.

The next challenge after the Colorado game is a struggling, but solid, Iowa State ball club.

The Cyclones are one win away from being a .500 team in one of the toughest conferences in the country. We are looking to pull the regular-season sweep against the Cyclones, after we beat them 82-57 in Manhattan in January.

One bright spot in the game for Iowa State was a 20-point performance from sophomore forward Wesley Johnson.

Then again, the game is in Ames, Iowa, and a win there and against Colorado could put the Wildcats on the right side of the bubble.

Plus, with those two wins and a solid Big 12 tournament, I do not see the NCAA Selection Committee leaving the best player in the nation out of the biggest college sporting event.

BASKETBALL NEWS AND NOTES

Beasley grabs 8th Rookie honor

Freshman forward Michael Beasley keeps turning heads at the Big 12 Conference offices.

Beasley received his sixth consecutive and eighth overall Rookie of the Week award. It is the first time in conference history for a men's player to win any weekly award six consecutive times. His eight Rookie wins are the most by any men's basketball player in Big 12 history.

He received the award after averaging 34.5 points and 13 rebounds last week. He averaged 47 percent from the floor and 44 percent from beyond the arc. He had back-to-back 30-point games for the third time this season. He tied Kansas' Drew Gooden's record for double-doubles in a season (25) and broke Texas' Kevin Durant's record for 30-point games in a season. He also set the K-State record for 30-point games in a season — he now has 12.

On the year, Beasley is averaging 26.7 points and 12.6 rebounds. He's only the third player in school history to top 700 points in one season and is 22 points shy of Mitch Richmond's single-season points record of 768.

Comic opera to showcase

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The comic opera "Too Many Sopranos," the latest production to be showcased at K-State, opens Wednesday in Nichols Theatre.

The opera, directed by Reginald Pittman, associate professor of music and head of K-State's opera program, said the production was done in collaboration with the theater department.

The opera tells the story of four sopranos who arrive in heaven and are told only one can be in the heavenly chorus because there are not enough tenors and basses in heaven's choir, Pittman said.

The sopranos are also told if they go to Hell and do a good deed, they can bring back as many tenors and basses as they need. They need more of those parts, Pittman said, to balance out the choir in heaven.

The production runs at 7:30 p.m. March 5-8, and a matinee show at 2:30 p.m. on March 9.

The cast members are all K-State students, but the musical and technical staffs are both faculty and students.

'Dirt' back for sophomore season

Review by Alex Peak

Despite a few knife jabs to the gut, the ever lean-mean Lucy Spiller is at it again.

Lucy, the editor-in-chief of "Dirt Now" — a celebrity-gossip tabloid of the show "Dirt" — kept fans on the edge of their seats for the past 11 months waiting for the second season to air. The show had a triumphant first season with Courteney Cox as leading lady Lucy and a handful of other oddball foil characters.

"Dirt Now" magazine shows audience members the ugly, back-stabbing world of tabloids. In the very magazine-like newsroom, staff members were stalked and even killed last season.

The show is chock-full of the high-energy stress of deadlines and drugs — the snorting, shooting and popping kinds — along with a slew of raunchy sex scenes, love affairs, stalking and near-death experiences. Most of the characters from the pilot season are back for round two. However, within the first 10 minutes, actress-turned-druggie-mess Julia is killed off after she breaks into Lucy's house, stabs her in the stomach several times and then runs into the street and accidentally gets run over by a car.

Despite being in a coma and hospitalized for a few weeks, Lucy recovers from the attack and gets back to work quickly. Long-time schizophrenic friend Don Konkey, as always, is supporting Lucy through all her struggles. This season seems to be more promising for him, as he's on a new treatment for his condition, and he says he's starting to feel normal again.

Lucy has a couple new staff members: assistant Kenny (who suffers from an anxiety/panic disorder) and freelance reporter Farber Kauffman who struggles to ignore all journalistic ethics and morals to write for "Dirt Now."

If season two follows the likeness of season one, we viewers have a lot of fast-paced action, murder, sex and scandals ahead.

But how much more filth and scandal can Lucy and her gossip magazine generate?

Though the show has its trashy moments, it beats the pants off reality TV any day.

Embellish

Cheap craft supplies can be accessories

We are always searching for the chance to be different — to stand out from the crowd and look different from the person standing next to us. If you're wracking your brain trying to come up with a fresh addition to your wardrobe, try zooming in and focusing on making small changes, rather than a total clothing overhaul. And remember: You can do the minimum if you're comfortable with that, but if you feel like over-achieving, you can always wear more flair.

CLOTH BRACELETS

It's always a sad day when you have to trash your favorite skirt or tank top because of an unfortunate stain or tear. However, there is a way to preserve the memories and create a clever accessory from the remains — without having to sew a quilt.

Cut a section of the undamaged part of the material into a rectangular shape, about 10 inches by 6 inches.

Materials needed

- Cloth bracelet: material, scissors, iron, safety pin
- Beaded decor: beads, safety pins
- Tailor-made totes: buttons, ribbon, iron-on patches, iron, scissors, hot-glue gun or needle and thread
- Personalized barrettes: hair barrettes, sharpies, stickers

Then, fold the material two or three times lengthwise to give it a thicker, more polished look. This will also prevent the unfinished edges from fraying in the future. If your material is bulky and having trouble staying folded, it helps to run a semi-hot iron over the folds a few times.

Once you have shaped your bracelet just how you want it, wrap it around your wrist several times and then safety-pin it together. Don't worry about the safety pin showing — it all adds to the "Yeah, I'm a creative hippie" look.

The beauty of these bracelets is you can get away with using any kind of material from denim to corduroy, though plain cotton usually works the best. You also can mix it up using material with different patterns like stripes or dots. Even solid colors go great with any outfit.

BEADED DECOR

In high school, I went through an unfortunate punk-rock/emo safety-pin phase. I still love safety pins, though now I try and wear them in a more tasteful, less angry manner.

Safety-pinned beads really can add that extra bit of happiness to any boring outfit. You can buy packages of safety-pins in the craft sections of stores like Wal-Mart or Target for a fairly cheap price, but if you're a real cheapskate keep your eyes open for freebies. Safety pins are like pennies — though they're valuable, no one seems to want them, so they usually end up in the most random places like kitchen cabinets or your roommate's dirty laundry. If you need beads, the best way to build your collection is also to be on the lookout for random opportunities. For example, if your grandma cleans out her jewelry collection from the last few decades, ask if you can break the three-foot necklaces apart to salvage the beads. Garage sales and thrift stores also are great for finding different beads.

Once you've rounded up a safety pin and a couple beads of your choice, you can decide where on your shirt or jeans you want to embellish. Make sure it's an out-of-the-way spot that won't get caught on anything or irritate you. Pop open the safety pin and stick it through the material from the backside. Then, slip the beads on the exposed, outer part of the pin, leaving enough room to push the sharp end of the pin back through the material and pin it shut. This way, all you can see are the beads on the outside, and it's not permanent like if you sewed them on. This also works great on purses, backpacks and even shoes.

TAILOR-MADE TOTES

Having trouble finding a purse or tote bag that's up to your style standards? Solution: Decorate your own. Armed with just a few cheap craft supplies, you can add a lot or a little to a dull bag.

In addition to safety-pinning beads as mentioned above, you also can embellish with buttons and ribbon. Buttons and ribbons come in all shapes, sizes and colors and, like beads, can be salvaged from old, unwanted clothing. Buttons can be attached either with a hot-glue gun or a needle-and-thread, which is less messy and less damaging. Ribbons also add a bit of a girly feel to your tote. One fun way to use ribbon in this instance is to simply tie it in a bow around one of the handles on your purse or tote bag. This works best with wide ribbon. Thinner ribbon looks great threaded through the outside of the purse's body or handles. To do this, cut tiny slots in the material of the bag and then weave the ribbon in and out, tying a bow where the two ends meet. This

Hot Chip's 3rd album contains dance beat, funk grooves

"Made in the Dark"

Review by Mark Sibilla

There have been many new musical movements since the beginning of this millennium. This decade has made it OK for nerdy white kids to dance. Bands like !!!, LCD Soundsystem, The Rapture, Franz Ferdinand and Justice are just a handful of the many artists that are drawing hipsters to the dance floor.

In 2006, the London genre-hopping electropop quintet Hot Chip released its second album, "The Warning," which not only was a huge improvement over the band's promising debut, but songs like "And I Was a Boy from School" and "Over and Over" rocketed Hot Chip to indie-superstar status.

A few weeks ago, Hot Chip released its highly anticipated third album, "Made in the Dark." Throughout the album's 13 tracks, the band deftly maneuvers between seemingly incongruous genres including deep house, hard rock and smooth R&B. The album is not as focused as "The Warning," but despite the album's uneven flow, "Made in the Dark" contains a wide variety of blissful moments and strong songs.

The album begins with "Out at the Pictures." The song starts with plodding ambient synthesizer lines that eventually begin to move faster and faster until a stuttering drum rhythm enters and kicks the song into high gear. The song's manic energy and buzzing synths makes me think of it as the kind of music video game characters would have blasting at a house party.

The second track "Shake a Fist" is an album highlight. The song's first half contains an aggressive, subwoof-er-pummeling jungle beat that segues into a sample from Todd Rundgren's seminal album, "Something/Anything?" The sample is a spoken word introduction that is cleverly used to coincide with the studio trickery of the track's second half. After Rundgren's speech, Hot Chip creates a space-funk groove so tight it would make Timbaland blush.

"Ready for the Floor" is the album's first single, and it is the perfect song to represent Hot Chip's musical aesthetic. It is a bouncy, danceable and downright charming song about asking a girl to dance at a club.

The album stumbles with the song "Bendable Poseable." The song just spins its wheels by taking an interesting groove and doing nothing exciting with it.

The band gets back on its feet with the sweet ballad "We're Looking for a Lot of Love." Sure, the song sounds like a million slow-jam clichés packed into four minutes, but there is a goofy sincerity and a technical prowess about it that makes the song downright irresistible.

The rest of the album's midsection continues strongly with the groovy "Touch Too Much," the rocking "One Pure Thought," which finds the band getting in touch with its inner New Order, and the taut funk of "Hold On," which brings to mind the dense grooves and multiple polyrhythms of "Remain in Light"-era Talking Heads.

However, after these triumphs, the album loses steam and peters out as it crosses the finish line. "Don't Dance" tries to keep the energy high, but its weak groove doesn't hold up to what came before it. This is followed by two sleepy ballads that are good, but not great. They simply don't reach the high standard that Hot Chip has for creating touching ballads that aren't corny.

But despite the shortcomings of "Made in the Dark," it has enough redeeming moments that are among some of Hot Chip's best. It is a little disappointing that Hot Chip could not continue the successes of "The Warning" for its third album, but "Made in the Dark" has plenty of highlights that will keep hipsters' hips shaking for months.

GOLF | New indoor facility helps team

We've got to get going right off the bat. We need to be pretty good, and I think we've got an excellent chance to do that."

The Wildcats will look to pick up where they left off at the end of the fall portion of the season. Their last outing, a second-place finish in the Pacific International Nov. 5-7, was their best performance of the season and one of the best in school history. In the tournament, K-State shot 826, the lowest 54-hole score in school history. The performance broke the previous record of 830, which was set in 2003.

Sophomore Joe Ida also broke the K-State mark for the lowest round on a par-72 by an individual with a score of 65. As a team, the Wildcats nearly upset then-No. 1 Charlotte, but couldn't hold a late lead and lost by two strokes.

Senior Kyle Yonke will be in the lineup for the first time since the Jim Colbert Intercollegiate Sept. 24-25. While he admits he had a shaky start last fall, he says he's back on track.

"I struggled for most of last semester. I could never really find my game," said Yonke, the team's lone senior. "I made some changes over break, and I'm hitting a lot better now. I'm really happy to get back out there and help the team."

Yonke has been named to the Academic All-Big 12 first team, as well as an All-America scholar by the Golf Coaches Association of America. He set several career-bests during the 2006-07 season at the Ron Moore Invitational. He said he thinks his experience could help the team.

"We've got a pretty young lineup for this tournament," he said. "We're taking a true freshman, two sophomores, a junior and myself. I played in this tournament last year, so I'm familiar with the course. I'll definitely be there to answer questions, especially for [true freshman] Kyle [Smell]."

Yonke said that the new indoor practice facility at the Colbert Hills Golf Club has helped the team in the off-season.

"We've been able to practice a lot more than in previous years," he said. "It's been a cold and snowy winter, and the indoor facility at [Colbert Hills] has really helped out a lot."

He said the new facility allows for more realistic conditions.

"It allows us to judge the ball flight with the wind," Yonke said. "At the baseball facility where we used to practice, we had to hit into a net which was only 30 or 40 yards away."

Yonke and Norris said they both think the team has improved during the off-season and said it appears everyone is ready to get back out on the course.

"We're really excited to get out to California and compete," Yonke said. "We're definitely ready to go."

FASHION | Barrettes, pins can add to look

works best on purses made out of more flexible material, and be sure to only cut into a purse if you know you won't regret it later.

Iron-on patches are another cheap and easy way to jazz up a tote or purse. Any store with a sewing section like Wal-Mart or Hobby Lobby has a wide variety of patches - some even have letters of the alphabet with which you could iron on your name or your favorite word.

PERSONALIZED BARRETTES

When I moved away to college, I went through doors and cabinets and threw out many tacky childhood trinkets and gaudy jewelry. However, one group of accessories I couldn't part with were my hair barrettes.

Though cheesy and slightly outdated, these barrettes serve as a great way to keep my hair out of my eyes and spruce up my look. To decorate hair barrettes, you can use permanent markers or Sharpies to write words, draw shapes or even just color them in. Small stickers can also add a touch of color or even a lighthearted appeal to your hairdo. Craft stores also have small, decorative flowers you can attach to any barrette.

These decorating ideas also can apply to other hair accessories like headbands.

BASEBALL | Wildcats to be tested Tuesday

UT-San Antonio is one of several teams added to beef up K-State's 2008 non-conference schedule. Hill said he kept his team in mind when piecing together this season's non-conference schedule.

"It's to benefit the team for conference play," he said. "The types of ball clubs we're going to see in conference play are similar to the teams we wanted to see earlier in the season."

The first pitch between the Wildcats and Roadrunners is set for 6 p.m. Tuesday, with senior Chase Buyak (0-1) to start for the Wildcats, followed by a noon game Wednesday with senior Brad Hutt (0-2) getting the start.

Hill said this might be the best team the Wildcats have seen so far this season, and it should be quite a test for the Wildcats.

"They were a Regional team last year - will probably be one this year," he said. "They're picked to win the Southland, and the top couple teams from [the Southland Conference] are as good as anyone in the country. They may well be the best team we've seen so far, but it gives us a great chance to see where we match up early in the season."

want to visit them when it was dark outside, so they bought her the tandem so she wouldn't be alone when she visited them. She had to sell it because she was moving states.

What else do you do for fun here? Did I hear that you juggle?

I wasn't that much into juggling before I came here. I would spend afternoons in the park because I didn't know many people yet. I juggled the diabolo. It's some kind of a huge yo-yo and two sticks and a string. You can send it into the air and do lots of things with it. It's about 2,000 or 3,000 years old. You can call it a Chinese yo-yo as well. It became popular in England in the 19th century, I think. The basics was just a tube and two cylinders of bamboo with holes in them. So when it turned, it whistled. A French engineer invented a better version with two cones, and he called it a diabolo. When I came here I started learning to play with two diabolos instead of one. I've juggled with the club here a couple of times. This weekend, we had a festival here. Some people drove 10 hours to come, and we had a couple professional jugglers as well. It was great, because we all learned new tricks.

My parents offered me fire poi for Christmas. You have two handles and a string going through both handles, with a weight at the end - it can be a tennis ball or anything. So you put the fire poi in white gas and light it on fire, and you spin it all around you. I've done it twice, but I need to practice it more without the fire.

Do you play any instruments?

I play a bit of guitar. Otherwise, I play the didgeridoo. I started playing years ago. Before I came here, I sat down with my mother and brother at a good shop that specialized in didgeridoos and bought a cheaper one, but it was still good.

Do you play any sports here?

I play inline hockey with the club team here. We go to Junction City twice a week to play since Manhattan doesn't have a rink. We're apparently the strongest league in the country. I think we won nationals. We have about 10 to 15 people in the club right now.

WEBINAR | Session educates advisers

president for education and personal development.

According to www.nacada.ksu.edu, a Webinar is a live event presented over the Internet. The Web site also said the Webinar was presented by Jennifer Joslin from the University of Iowa and Casey Self from Arizona State University, both academic-advising directors at their respective colleges. Lynch said this shows the versatility of a Webinar, in that it can be viewed anywhere, anytime, by people all across the country or world.

Lynch, who helped organize and also attended the Webinar, said he wanted to be involved in the process to help educate his advisers.

"This was sort of an inservice training for advisers," he said. "Part of my responsibilities include dealing with advisers - I want them to be educated on this topic and know how to handle certain situations."

Lynch also works with Leigh Cunningham, NACADA's coordinator of educational programs. Cunningham said this Webinar is just one in a series of 11 for the 2007-08 school year. She said there is an advisory board made up of NACADA members who choose topics for the Webinars.

"We thought this particular subject would be good for academic advisers to get a taste of because it's something a lot of people just don't discuss," Cunningham said.

She said the Webinar addressed issues like what advisers should know about GLBTQA lifestyles and how they can educate themselves on terminology and relating to students. Cunningham also said NACADA received a very positive response from the advisers who attended the Webinar.

Chelsey Fritch, junior in vocal performance, said for gays and lesbians, sexual orientation is just one aspect of their lives.

"There are so many more parts of [people's] lives that matter," Fritch said. "But we do need to create more of an understanding here on campus."

Fritch, president of K-State's Progressive Alliance - formerly the Queer/Straight Alliance - said though she hasn't personally seen the Webinar on GLBTQA issues, she supports the fact it is spreading awareness on campus.

"As long as it's giving an accurate account of what it's like to be GLBTQA," Fritch said. "Then I think it's great."

"If you're unsure of who you are, then having an adviser who understands and can relate to GLBTQA issues will be very beneficial. But if you're confident in yourself and your sexual orientation, then you don't really even need an adviser to talk about it."

- Solar power not feasible/expensive.
- Schurr wears a green tie.

How would you promote K-State's image in the Big 12?

Schurr

- Beat the crap out of the others at football.

Robert Swift, vice presidential candidate

- Take steps toward being an environmentally friendly campus.

Audience questions:

What will your administrations be doing in the realm of smoking bans?

Schurr

- Will keep the ball rolling.
- Opposed to smoking bans.
- Smoking is a freedom of choice.

Peele

- Will work for what students want.
- Won't ignore issues they disagree with.

ed basic physics research with practical application in time keeping and clocks, said Dean Zollman, university distinguished professor and head of the Department of Physics.

"Overall, from the types of questions we had at the end and the students I talked to at the end, I think it related very well," Zollman said. "He was able to explain very complicated research and how it relates to people even if they don't understand the physics."

The Peterson Public Lecture Series in Physics sponsored Phillips' lecture. Now in its second year at K-State, Chester Peterson Jr. said he endowed the lecture series as a catalyst for young students to get them interested in physics.

Peterson, who received two bachelor's and a master's degree from K-State, also said Phillips' enthusiasm captured audience members during his lecture.

"He communicated well to the audience, and he took something that was semitechnical and put it in a way people could understand," said Peterson, a Lindsborg, Kan., resident. "He showed that the world is so complex and that youngsters can have a part in it."

FRESHMAN POINT GUARD

Emotional moments

Senior Stewart brings passion, character to team, should be remembered

Somewhere along the line in collegiate sports, the term student-athlete seems to have all but disappeared. In today's NCAA atmosphere, it is the TV ratings, national media exposure, endorsements and revenue generated that has become the bar used to measure the success of programs and athletes alike.

JOE BERGKAMP

It is rare for a school to be able to recruit the type of player that can bring all of those ingredients to a university. The types of players that do that have last names like Beasley, Walker, Mayo and Durant. As rare as players like that come around, it might even be less frequent for a player like senior guard Clint Stewart to turn up.

While playing in 119 games as a Wildcat, Stewart has been an All-Big 12 Academic Team member and as a representative of the Winter Sports Good Works Team, another honor bestowed upon him by the Big 12 Conference. With job offers already lined up after his May 2008 graduation in information systems, Stewart's career is in its swan song, but his legacy here at K-State is only its infancy.

The 6-foot-4-inch guard from Tulsa, Okla., did not come to K-State with the type of fanfare that has surrounded the program as of late. In fact, he came into an entirely different system of K-State basketball, a program mired in mediocrity. In his freshman season, Stewart was the true-freshman who started all 29 games for the Wildcats.

He became the leading freshman in assists for the 2004-05 Big 12 season. Stewart also has set several records at K-State. Most notably, he has the single-season assists record, breaking former guard Steve Henson's mark. Since his freshman season, Clint has moved up into second all-time in career assists at K-State. However, the Stewart's humbleness shines through when it comes to his records.

"In four years, Jacob [Pullen] will have that No. 2, maybe No. 1 spot," Stewart said. Adversity has also followed Clint over the last four years at K-State with coaching changes and the recent death of his mother, Vanessa Stewart.

While changing coaches midway through a career might deter some athletes, Stewart has approached it in a positive way.

"It's been kind of fun," he said. "Learning three different styles of basketball, there hasn't been room for complacency, so it's been a different learning experience every year."

When Stewart's mother died from cancer on Feb. 5, the Wildcat fan base showed an outpouring of support and respect for the entire Stewart family that did not go unnoticed.

"It was tremendous, all the cards and sympathy was so helpful," Stewart said. "It really shows the character of the K-State community. It shows that it's not all just about basketball. It's about life and learning and family, and the fans really showed that this is a family."

While Vanessa Stewart might not be able to make the trips to Manhattan anymore in person, Clint said he knows she is still doing what she loved most, watching her son play basketball.

"Knowing that she's finally pain-free and watching down over me definitely motivates me," he said. "She's my hero and inspiration, and every time I go out onto the basketball floor and do what she loved to watch me do I think about her."

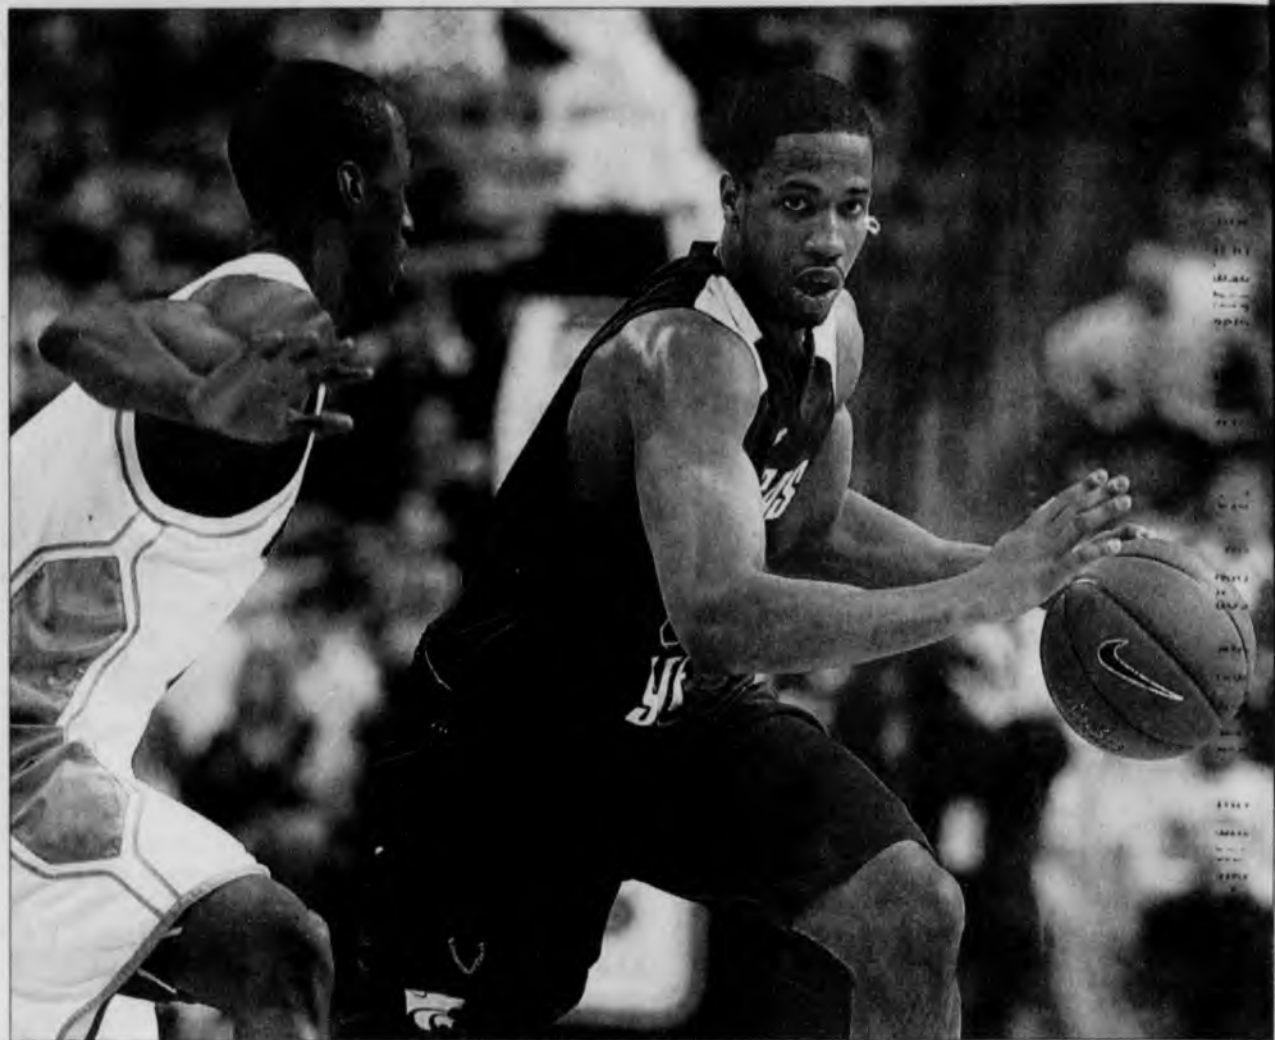

On the court, Stewart had to assume the role of seasoned veteran on a team that boasts eight newcomers. While a sensational amount of talent came in with this new class, so did some inexperience.

"Young kids tend to be up and down, that's just human nature for 18-19 year olds," coach Frank Martin said. "You have to expect these emotional changes, and peaks and valleys with these young guys. Older guys don't experience [peaks and valleys] and Clint has provided us with a guy that can fill that role."

Martin said he hopes his own sons demonstrate Clint's character in their own lives.

"I have two sons that I hope to grow up to be like Clint Stewart," he said. "If they can grow up to be 22 years old and be the type of guy that he is, then I'm going to be a proud father."

While the definition of a student-athlete might have changed quite a bit over the years, recognition of success, character and dignity has not. Clint has set an example for what K-State athletes should try to attain.

In a centennial celebration speech of the NCAA, President Miles Brand said, "Let us celebrate all the participants, the literally millions and millions of young women and men who played, now play and will play in our athletics contests and who attend our institutions of higher education. Cheers to all of them, past, present and future. Let's celebrate the student-athlete."

I say, let's celebrate Clint Stewart.

Unprecedented freshman class brings personality to Wildcat basketball team

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This has been a season to remember, from freshman forward Michael Beasley's obsession with SpongeBob SquarePants to the on-going iPod saga during post-game press conferences. And who could forget freshman forward Bill Walker calling out the faith of the media following the game against KU Jan. 30? That's the part of the No. 1 Rivals.com class the rest of the world sees.

But ask any one of the players what they see, and they will tell you that they see family when they look at their teammates.

"I love all of them like a brother," Beasley said.

They all said they hang out on an almost constant basis - playing video games, watching college basketball, eating.

"Everybody enjoys each other's company," freshman forward Ron Anderson said. "I know somebody, somewhere is hanging out with another member of the team."

Many of them knew each other. Beasley, Anderson, freshman forward Jamar Samuels and freshman guard Dominique Sutton all played together for AAU's D.C. Assault. Throw in junior-transfer forward Andre Gilbert and freshman guard Fred Brown and this family has helped the roster of seven grow into a team with an 18-10 record overall and an 8-6 record in the Big 12 Conference.

The team has gone through losing streaks and growing pains - "We had to learn to play as a team as the season has progressed. We're getting better every day," Anderson said - and sad moments - the passing of Vanessa Stewart. "I think everybody cried [the night of the wake]," Beasley said. However, everyone said there was an immediate connection.

"The chemistry has been there for a long time," Anderson said.

Beasley said there was a connection the first day.

"We came in and had a team meeting," he said. "We told each other we were in from the start. We were in from the first jump. We're a family now. There's no turning back."

SURPRISES

The transition from high school to college is different for everyone. Kids move from home to dorm rooms, learn how to wake themselves up in the morning, how to feed and take care of themselves. However, when it comes to the transition from high school to Division 1 basketball, it's a whole different perspective.

"I knew it was going to be a fast-paced game and people were a lot stronger, but I didn't know to what extent," Anderson said. "I think Scott Greenawalt [the basketball strength and conditioning coach] did a good job of preparing me and the rest of the team for what came ahead. I can see how much I've progressed ... It's helped me out down the stretch."

Gilbert agreed with Anderson, although his first thought was the lack of money college students have at their disposal. "Basketball-wise, on the court, it's size and strength," he said. "You feel like you're a good basketball player where you come from, but the thing about college is everybody is the best where they came from. We had to come together and it's very competitive. You have to compare size and strength in college."

For another teammate, it was between the competitiveness of the Big 12, as well as the weather. "The biggest surprise was how physical it is, the Big 12 especially," Brown said. "Also, for me, coming from Florida, I had to get used to the snow."

"The biggest surprise was how physical it is, the Big 12 especially," Brown said. "Also, for me, coming from Florida, I had to get used to the snow."

"The biggest surprise was how physical it is, the Big 12 especially," Brown said. "Also, for me, coming from Florida, I had to get used to the snow."

BALANCING ACT

The scheduling of a student-athlete can be hectic. Between away games, practices, team meetings, weights and regular college classes, the players said it can be hard to find a good medium.

"The most stressful thing would probably be balancing schoolwork with basketball," Anderson said. "At the beginning, it was very difficult. Luckily, we had people at the academic learning center to help us. They did a great job of helping us with our schoolwork. If you have an away game on Wednesday and you have a project due Wednesday, you have to turn it in early. You have to get it done while practicing."

While Brown agreed with Anderson, he also mentioned his transition from Mount Saint Joseph Community College as being rough. Pullen said the biggest transition for him was adjusting his sleeping schedule.

"I swear, I hate this schedule," he said. "They map out our lives. They have me somewhere at nine in the morning, 12, one, two. We have to be somewhere every day. ... It messes up my sleeping schedule. Sometimes, I go to sleep at one or two o'clock in the morning and I have to be up at eight. I like to get my 15 hours of sleep that I got in high school."

Top: Freshman guard Jacob Pullen said the team was able to gel during the summer. "All the freshmen were together in the summer-time, so we got to know each other really quick."

While the others might be stressed about class, Beasley said there's plenty of time for him to be worrying.

"I'm too young to be stressed," he said.

FAN SUPPORT

Almost everyone said the best thing about K-State was the fan support. Some of them, it caught off-guard. To others, it was no surprise.

"I love the fans," Pullen said. "When we step in Bramlage ... when we walk out there at the 11-minute mark to go into the locker room, there could be 1,000 open seats and we walk out and there's no open seats. It gets crowded really fast and I love that. I saw it in Midnight Madness last year, when [Bob Huggins] was out here. I came out and saw when KU played K-State here last year. I was ready for it."

Brown agreed with Pullen, saying the fans were the "most energetic fans ever." Anderson also said the Wildcat nation was a big part of the package when he committed here.

"They had a big influence on my committing here," he said. "They show so much support for the basketball team and program and everybody here. I had to commit here. I love being around the fans because they show great support for us."

Beasley was another player who agreed about the fan support.

"I love them and they love me," he said. "I love Manhattan."

However, there was one new addition to the team who had an entirely different response.

"It would have to be the Wabash [Cannonball]. I love it," Gilbert said with a laugh.

While it may have taken awhile before everyone really worked well together, Gilbert said it wasn't long before they really combined their styles of play.

"It's bringing our basketball styles together and incorporating coaching styles and learning the scheme of things," he said. "With us being new, it was a new offense so we had to learn everything and put it together on the court."

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Andre Gilbert said most people only get to see the mad side of freshman forward Bill Walker. "Bill's cool. He's funny. A lot of people get to see the angry side of Bill but he's a real, funny nice guy."

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Fred Brown said, "Wherever one person goes, there's bound to be two or three more people."

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Michael Beasley said he's never experienced what he's going through right now. "I've never been in this situation before. That's why I love it so much."

BIG 12 MEN'S WRAP-UPS

BAYLOR (20-8, 8-6 BIG 12)

Recap: The Bears have only won four of their last 10 contests, but they are currently on a three-game winning streak. Their recent resurgence has moved them into a tie with K-State for third place in the conference standings.

Last game: W 100-89 vs. Missouri

This week's games: Wednesday vs. Texas A&M, Saturday at Texas Tech

COLORADO (11-17, 3-11 BIG 12)

Recap: Colorado snapped a four-game losing streak with a home win against Iowa State last Saturday. They are currently in last place in the conference but only trail Iowa State by one game. Their lone conference win is against Oklahoma, Nebraska and Iowa State.

Last game: W 67-55 vs. Iowa State

This week's games: tonight at K-State, Sunday at Nebraska

BIG 12 WOMEN'S WRAP-UPS

BAYLOR (24-4, 12-3 BIG 12)

Recap: Since starting conference play with an 8-0 record, the Lady Bears are just 4-3. They are currently tied with K-State for the conference lead and could clinch at least a share of the conference title with a win on Thursday.

Last game: L 72-53 at Texas A&M

Next week's games: Thursday vs. Oklahoma State

COLORADO (15-13, 4-11 BIG 12)

Recap: After opening the season with a 12-2 record, the Buffaloes have won just three of their last 14 contests. However, two of those three wins were back-to-back upsets of Texas and K-State. They are currently in a three-way tie with Texas Tech and Kansas for ninth place in the conference standings.

Last game: L 63-55 at Nebraska

Next week's games: Wednesday vs. Missouri

IOWA STATE (14-15, 4-10 BIG 12)

Recap: The Cyclones have lost three straight games and nine of their last 11. Their only conference wins are against Missouri, Oklahoma State, Colorado, and Nebraska. They must win their last two contests to avoid a losing overall record.

Last game: L 67-55 at Colorado

This week's games: Wednesday at Missouri, Saturday vs. K-State

KANSAS (26-3, 11-3 BIG 12)

Recap: Since starting the season 20-0, the Jayhawks are just 6-3, including a 84-75 loss at K-State on Jan. 30. However, with Texas' recent upset loss to Texas Tech, Kansas moved into a tie with Texas for the Big 12 lead. The Jayhawks have been in the Associated Press Top 10 all season.

Last game: Late Monday against Texas Tech

This week's games: Saturday at Texas A&M

IOWA STATE (18-10, 7-8 BIG 12)

Recap: The Cyclones have been inconsistent this season. They have had problems with consistency on the road (6-5 outside of Ames) and in close games (7-8 in games decided by 10 points or less). They must win on Wednesday in order to avoid a losing conference record.

Last game: W 51-42 vs. Kansas

Next week's games: Wednesday at Nebraska

KANSAS (15-13, 4-11 BIG 12)

Recap: The Jayhawks started the season at 11-2, but have been inconsistent in Big 12 play. They managed just two wins outside of Lawrence this season, and didn't win close games down the stretch (3-8 in games decided by 10 points or less).

Last game: L 51-42 at Iowa State

Next week's games: Wednesday vs. K-State

K-STATE (18-10, 8-6 BIG 12)

Recap: After starting conference play at 5-0, the Wildcats have fallen on hard times. They are on a four-game losing streak, and they have lost six of their last nine contests. Freshman forward Michael Beasley has continued his historic season in style, averaging 26.7 points and 12.6 rebounds per contest.

Last game: L 88-74 at Kansas

This week's games: tonight vs. Colorado, Saturday at Iowa State

MISSOURI (15-14, 5-9 BIG 12)

Recap: The Tigers have shown tremendous potential this season, but inconsistency, injuries and suspensions have led to a lackluster overall record. They have lost their last two contests and have only won four of their last 13.

Last game: L 100-89 at Baylor

This week's games: Wednesday vs. Iowa State, Saturday at Oklahoma

K-STATE (20-8, 12-3 BIG 12)

Recap: K-State is currently tied with Baylor for the conference lead. After a shaky start, the Wildcats had a 7-0 start in Big 12 play, including road wins against Texas A&M, Texas, and Oklahoma State. They can clinch at least a share of the conference title with a win on Wednesday.

Last game: L 73-68 at Colorado

This week's games: Wednesday at Kansas

MISSOURI (9-19, 2-11 BIG 12)

Recap: This has been a season to forget for the Tigers. Aside from owning just two victories outside of Columbia, they have won just one of their last 13 contests, and just two in 2008. Their sole conference victories, both at home, came against Texas Tech on Jan. 12 and against Kansas on Feb. 24.

Last game: L 81-52 at K-State

Next week's games: Wednesday at Colorado

NEBRASKA (17-10, 6-8 BIG 12)

Recap: The Cornhuskers have managed to pick up the pace after starting Big 12 play at 0-4. They have won six of their last 10 contests, including home upsets against K-State and Oklahoma.

Last game: L 77-63 at Oklahoma State

This week's games: Wednesday vs. Oklahoma, Saturday at Oklahoma State

OKLAHOMA (19-10, 7-7 BIG 12)

Recap: Oklahoma has been as inconsistent as anyone in the conference this season. Freshman forward Blake Griffin leads the team with 15.2 points and 9.3 rebounds per game.

Last game: W 64-37 at Texas A&M

This week's games: Wednesday at Oklahoma State, Saturday vs. Missouri

NEBRASKA (19-10, 8-7 BIG 12)

Recap: The Cornhuskers opened the season with a 13-3 record, but have won six of their last 13 games. Their last five games have been decided by an average of less than eight points. However, they only won two of those contests. A win on Wednesday would guarantee them a winning conference record.

Last game: W 63-55 vs. Colorado

Next week's games: Wednesday vs. Iowa State

OKLAHOMA (21-6, 11-4 BIG 12)

Recap: After losing their first two games of the season, the Sooners have been near the top of the conference standings all year. They weren't able to win against Baylor, which should cost them a shot at the conference title. They are currently in third place, but only trail Baylor and K-State by one game.

Last game: L 65-50 vs. Texas

Next week's games: Thursday at Texas A&M

OKLAHOMA STATE (16-12, 7-7 BIG 12)

Recap: After a dismal 1-6 start to conference play, the Cowboys have caught fire, winning six of their last seven, including a monster upset of Kansas, 61-60, on Feb. 23. They have three players averaging double figures, including freshman James Anderson, who is pacing the squad with 13.9 points per contest.

Last game: W 77-63 vs. Nebraska

This week's games: Wednesday vs. Oklahoma, Sunday at Texas

TEXAS (24-5, 11-3 BIG 12)

Recap: Texas has won 11 of their last 13. The Longhorns, who are tied with Kansas for the conference lead, are led by sophomore guard D.J. Augustin, who is averaging just shy of 20 points per contest (19.7).

Last game: L 83-80 at Texas Tech

This week's games: tonight vs. Nebraska, Sunday vs. Oklahoma State

TEXAS A&amp;M (21-8, 7-7 BIG 12)

Recap: In head coach Mark Turgeon's first season, the Aggies have seen everything this season. They started the season at 15-1 and were ranked before losing three straight games to Texas Tech, K-State and a five-overtime contest against Baylor. Since then, the Aggies are 6-4.

Last game: L 64-37 at Oklahoma

Next week's games: Wednesday at Baylor, Saturday at Massachusetts

TEXAS TECH (16-12, 7-7 BIG 12)

Recap: Texas Tech faced an unexpected change when former head coach Bob Knight retired in the middle of the season. Since coach Pat Knight's debut on Feb. 6, the Red Raiders are 4-4, including home upsets against K-State and Texas.

Throughout the season, Texas Tech has been 3-9 on the road.

Last game: Late Monday vs. Kansas

Next week's games: Saturday vs. Baylor

TEXAS A&amp;M (22-7, 10-5 BIG 12)

Recap: The Aggies have played well recently, winning nine of their last 10, but a sluggish start to 2008 (4-4 in the month of January) dashed their hopes of a conference title. They are currently ranked No. 20 in the AP poll.

Last game: W 73-54 vs. Texas Tech

Next week's games: Thursday vs. Oklahoma

TEXAS TECH (16-13, 4-11 BIG 12)

Recap: The Lady Raiders started the season 12-1, but they've fallen apart in the second half of the season (4-12 in 2008). They haven't won a conference game outside of Lubbock this season. They are currently tied with Colorado and Kansas for ninth place in the Big 12.

Last game: L 73-54 at Oklahoma State

Next week's games: Wednesday at Texas

Wildcats should be in better postseason position than last year

It's time to take a quick flashback to last year — right around this time to be exact.

The Wildcats, under former head coach Bob Huggins, were working their way toward an NCAA Tournament berth and had a 21-10, 10-6 Big 12 Conference record heading into the Big 12 Tournament.

Many felt that a win in the Big 12 Tournament would place the fourth-place-finishing Wildcats into the NCAA field of 65 for the first time since 1996. After a convincing win over Texas Tech and a close loss to Kansas, K-State was still denied an invite to the Big Dance.

The above scenario was devastating to the K-State nation and, most importantly, the Wildcat team that had played its heart out the entire year. It was difficult to see seniors like Cartier Martin and Lance Harris deprived of playing in the most prestigious of post-season tournaments.

However, many believed that this would never happen again. Any K-State team that got that close would get the nod, no matter what side-ways rationale the Selection Committee could come up with. A team that achieved ten conference wins, a fourth-place finish and 23 wins overall would never, ever be uninvited again.

What's disappointing is this year's team has played themselves into the exact same scenario as the 2006-07 team. With two conference games left, the Wildcats need to win both in order to guarantee a top four placing in the conference and also a first-round bye in the Big 12 Tournament. Yes, the sky is starting to creep down toward the Earth, but luckily, there is some time left to stop it from crashing completely down on K-State.

Tonight's game against Colorado could not come at a better time. The lowly Buffaloes enter Manhattan with the worst record in the Big 12 and really nothing to play for. Sure, they could play spoiler, but a motivated and distraught K-State team — on Senior Night, no less — should be able to use Colorado as a punching bag. All of the pent-up anger and disgust that the Wildcats might have developed over this four-game losing streak should be released tonight.

After Colorado, K-State will venture up north to take on Iowa State, another cellar-dweller of the Big 12. Though the Wildcats have had recent trouble on the road, a win at Iowa State is clearly in the cards and also a must for the team. If you can not win on the road against lesser opponents at the end of the season, then you do not deserve an invite to the NCAA tournament. Secure this win and along with it comes a top-four finish in the league and an all-important win total of 20.

If the Wildcats stand at 20-10 and fourth place in the Big 12 going into the conference tournament, it is all but certain that we will be seeing this team in the Big Dance. It is tough to imagine a team with freshmen forwards Michael Beasley and Bill Walker being left out after all they have done this year.

The 2007-08 K-State basketball season has been a memorable one thus far. With two wins and a good showing at the Big 12 Tournament at the Sprint Center in Kansas City, Mo., we will be seeing the Wildcats once again in the Big Dance. I will say to keep your fingers crossed though, because crazier things have happened in the recent past.

Students can choose between Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr and Lydia Peele today for K-State's Student body president by going to www.k-state.edu/elections/.

Pirates offer alternative to ordinary

Dear Students,

Captain "Red Beard" Schurr and First Mate Carlson greatly appreciate the support of the K-State student body. We feel honored that voters have placed their trust in the pirates.

We have been accused of being not serious, being not willing to serve and being smelly. These are lies of Ninja propaganda. We are serious — we will serve and we do bathe, usually on Thursday. We are not just ordinary politicians — anyone can be a plain politician, but we bring something extra.

We see that K-state is rallying behind issues like the Ninja crisis, fiscal responsibility, fun in politics and the Touchdown Cannon. Ninjas are still a threat at K-State from their dark, hiding places and still the Pirates are the only ones prepared for the challenge of seeking them out. No other campaign could have done the tremendous work and gathered such great support as we have done on our small budget that is clear of all donations, special interest money and plundering. We have endeavored to put fun and humor in K-state politics, bridging gaps with laughter and giving many a reason to vote.

We do not seek to reinstate the Touchdown Cannon just because pirates like cannons, but because we have found that people want the cannon to sound the marks of K-State's victorious accomplishments.

Some might think that the pirates don't think big. We have an excellent satellite campus in Salina, and we believe it is time to set up another. We want to sail up the Kansas River to Lawrence, take command of their school and annex it, turning it into K-State Lawrence. This is no small task, and it will take time to turn the ship around and bring it up to par with our current campuses in Manhattan and Salina.

We are often asked "What are you going to do for me?" Beginning today and continuing through Wednesday, we will be in the K-State Student Union giving away name-brand pirate hats.

We again acknowledge the power of the student votes to get us here, to keep the pirate cause alive and to seek the best for K-State — and we are sincerely thankful. Come aboard, join the crew, make your mark and think Cannon!

Peele, Swift emphasize 3 changes

Dear Students,

Students need a strong voice to speak on their behalf to ensure they are receiving all that they can during their time here at K-State. During recent years, we have seen great changes and progress happening all over our university. But we do not want to stop there. We are proud of the way our school continues to reach for more, and we want to play our part in matching K-State in this effort.

The campaign for more proposes three issues that will benefit the university now and in the future.

First, we want to offer more peace of mind to the K-State community. Every student should feel comfortable and safe on their campus. To foster this environment, we believe that proactive and preventative action is necessary. We plan to do this by increasing police presence on campus, working with university administration to address student-safety concerns within the parking garage, and enhancing services provided to students to help them feel safe in their community.

Next, we want to ensure our university more for the future. We recently received a D+ on our college sustainability report card from the Sustainable Endowments Institute. We feel K-State can do better. Our plan includes a vision to unify current campus efforts and further explore innovative revenue options for a stronger campus recycling program.

Finally, Robert and I want to make sure students receive more for their money. This year as a full-time student, you paid $609.80 in Student Privilege Fees. We believe it is our duty to make sure that you receive the best services in return. To do this we will evaluate the quality-of-care and services Lafene Health Center (the recipient of one-third of your fees) provides and ensure accountability to other entities that receive student funding.

At the end of the day, Robert and I are students first. We like to have a great time, and we love seeing our school thrive. Because of this, we are dedicated to seeing the issues that affect students at all different levels be addressed.

Pair shares different perspectives, same goals for good of university

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Peele said she never thought she would want to run another campaign after she was elected student body vice president in March 2007.

Peele, senior in secondary education-mathematics, said she changed her mind last semester and decided to run for student body president in late November. While she participated in her high-school student council, Peele said K-State Student Governing Association served as a different experience – but she hadn't planned to run as president from her SGA start.

"I think almost any freshman who gets involved with student government that thought probably crosses their mind as to what they want to do in the future," Peele said. "But it wasn't a plan of mine by any means. I learned a lot from the experiences I've had here at K-State and gained some confidence in my abilities."

Peele and her running mate, Robert Swift, both said they had expected to receive questions about a female presidential candidate and male vice presidential candidate, but they have received more questions about their campaign platform. Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom served as the last K-State female-male student body president and vice president in 2004-05.

"With any organization I've worked with, females in these organizations have been some of the best leaders and some of the most effective members," said Swift, junior in political science. "We haven't received many questions about it, and I think that's the way it should be."

Peele could make K-State history Wednesday as the first student body vice president elected as student body president.

It has been 11 years since a student body vice president ran for student body president at K-State. While the vice president position existed for several years in the 1950s, Student Governing Association reinstated the position in spring 1993.

Peele and Swift initially met through KSU Student Foundation and Student Senate. Beyond their professional relationship, Peele said she considers Swift a close, respectable friend with whom there is "never a dull moment."

With the pair's booth at the K-State Student Union and in her classes, Peele said she has learned about students' visions for K-State. Campaign signs, chalking and T-shirts are necessary for name recognition, but conversations with students regarding their K-State needs are most important during campaigns, Peele said.

"People have a lot to say, and I think a lot of times someone needs to take the time to listen," she said. "I think that's more valuable than anything else."

Peele and Swift both said they would like to see more students vote in the general election this week. Primary election turnout last week was lower than 2007 – 2,614 voters participated in last week's general election, while 3,363 voters participated in 2007's primary election.

"It's good to see competition for the process overall," Swift said.

Pirates say they joined to combat ninjas, bring laughter to election

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two years ago, a pair of future-Pirates discovered each other's nearly identical interests and similarities that now support them as they brave walking the plank into their campaign for student body president and vice president.

Pirate-themed running mates Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr, senior in electrical engineering, and Scott "First Mate" Carlson, junior in electrical engineering, first met when Schurr was the sound engineer for the K-State Singers.

While searching for a job, Carlson found Schurr's name on the K-State Singers' Web site and then contacted him to discuss the sound-engineering position for the Singers.

Schurr was leaving the position and he said Carlson was hired as the new sound engineer. They have remained friends since then.

Carlson said he and Schurr think along similar lines and understand each other. He said Schurr is older and a more experienced visionary, while Carlson has more logistical thinking.

"Even if I don't know how to explain myself fully, Tyrone knows what I'm talking about," Carlson said. "If I ever have a question or situation he's there for me. Our interests are pretty much exactly the same, too."

Schurr said these immense similarities and their past experiences help them work exceedingly well together.

"I'm basically just an older version of Scott," Schurr said. "We share a scary number of similarities. Even before we started our campaign together, he would come by to counsel – we would sit down and solve problems for the K-State Singers. We would discuss and reveal possibilities and solutions for them."

Schurr said he wanted to find someone to begin a student-body presidential campaign with, and when he asked Carlson to join him, he readily agreed.

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr and Scott "First Mate" Carlson encourage voters to "Think Cannon."

He said they formed the pirate theme because he heard that a pair of ninja-themed candidates was possibly campaigning, too.

Schurr said he and Carlson have brought laughter and personality to collegiate politics, and he thinks these amicable components will ultimately be able to bring students together for the greater good of K-State.

"Students are most comfortable and open to those who are approachable," Schurr said. "We have so many students come up to us and just talk to us about their ideas and issues. We bring people together through laughter and personality, which are two things that are very non-conventional in politics. They are two traits that can easily connect and open students up to new ideas, and can bring the students of K-State closer together as a whole."

Schurr said though he and Carlson have a lighthearted and approachable stance in their campaign, students should also take the Pirates seriously.

He said they have great ideas, can communicate with others and have a passion for helping K-State students and their causes as much as they can.

Proposed roundabout could begin late this year

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The construction of a multi-lane roundabout at Fourth Street and Bluemont Avenue could begin as soon as the end of this year, funneling traffic to two lanes on Bluemont for perhaps as long as a year.

Buck Driggs, engineering field technician at HWS Consulting in Manhattan, which is designing much of the redevelopment project, said he realistically expects the project to start next spring but it could start sooner if issues are resolved quickly enough.

"Our hopes are that we can start the construction in early spring, so that we can keep traffic under control with all the students leaving in the summer," Driggs said.

The Walgreens store will not be moved, but houses on the other three corners of the intersection must be moved to make room for the roundabout.

Driggs said he is negotiating where and how to move the houses with several area preservation groups, and he expects the issue to be resolved soon. The most likely solution, he said, is moving the houses back farther on their property.

Linda Glasgow, president of the Manhattan/Fort Riley Preservation Alliance, said the three houses have been labeled historic houses in Manhattan because of their age and building material. She said one of the houses, the Sofia Jarbeaux house, which has stood at its current location since 1871, is made of limestone and would be difficult to move.

"I think the best possible thing for those houses would be to keep them where they are," she said. "But the city needs to look long and hard for options of where to move these places."

She said city officials have kept the historic aspects of these houses in mind, but they also need to remember that historic houses like those at the intersection help identify a city.

"Limestone is one way Manhattan stands out from other cities, in addition to usually being beautiful homes," she said.

Driggs said Bluemont Avenue will remain open when construction begins; the construction company will build half of the roundabout at a time to maintain two-way traffic. Fourth Street south of Bluemont is already closed due to construction.

Benefit concert promotes awareness

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To raise awareness of the global AIDS epidemic, K-State's Silver Key Sophomore Honors society and Union Programming Council will host "Face AIDS," a benefit concert tonight.

The bands Flee The Seen, McCoy and Lucy's Revenge will perform starting at 7:30 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Silver Key has partnered with Face AIDS, a student campaign to fight AIDS in Africa, along with colleges, universities and high schools worldwide.

"Students lead the way in terms of making change," said Ashley Guenther, member of Silver Key and junior in agricultural economics. "If students recognize the value of acknowledging the AIDS epidemic, the world will follow soon."

According to the Face AIDS Web site, the organization is driven by a belief in a simple fact: AIDS is a preventable and treatable disease. Yet in 2007, more than two million people died from AIDS, the majority of whom lived in southern Africa.

The organization engages young people by connecting them with individuals affected by the pandemic and with opportunities to fight the virus.

Silver Key will sell AIDS Awareness Pins on campus made by men and women affected by AIDS. Students will receive the name, picture and story of the individuals who made the pin, who work in income-generating support groups in rural Rwanda.

Silver Key will have a table in the Union from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. today, where they will be selling the AIDS awareness pins, and tickets for the concert at $3 in advance and $5 at the door. Guenther said after 1 p.m., students can purchase tickets for the advanced price at the Union Program Council office on the third floor of the Union.

Emily Surdez, Silver Key member and freshman in agriculture education, said this event is a way for students to get involved with funding research to find a cure for AIDS.

"I think that some point in your life you'll know someone who's infected with aids, and it is nice to know that you did something to help fund research," she said.

All money raised by Face AIDS is matched by grants from private donors and given to support Partners In Health clinics in Rwanda. Partners In Health is widely recognized as a model organization treating AIDS and providing comprehensive health care in poor countries.

Guenther said this is Silver Key's first event like this and is an event they hope to continue next year.

"Whether it is affecting K-State and Manhattan, [AIDS] is something that has worldwide effects," she said. "It is an awesome endeavor," she said.

Parents of new generation more involved in college students' life decisions

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Trenton Amen decided to go out-of-state to attend college for his degree in aviation sciences, he didn't know he would be learning not only how to fly helicopters, but also how to deal with these hovering aircraft known as parents.

A recent report from www.CNN.com said over-involved parents are now recognized by students and professionals as "helicopter" or "hovering" parents, and Georgia Tech's director of admissions Ingrid Hayes said these types of moms and dads are becoming an even larger part of the college-admissions process each year, according to the Feb. 5 article.

"I come from an extremely close family, but I knew I wanted to get out on my own," Amen, a freshman professional pilot major, said. "And they were supportive of that - it's just been hard because I think my mom especially still wants to be a constant in my life."

According to the CNN report, Amen's parents are not the only ones struggling to turn loose of their child during the transition from high school to college.

The report, conducted by the National Survey of Student Engagement, found that 85 percent of first-year college students were in frequent contact with their mother via phone or computer, while 71 percent of freshmen communicated frequently with their fathers.

The report also recorded lower grades alongside the higher levels of parent involvement.

Carla Jones, senior associate dean of student life, said helicopter parents are a more recent phenomenon that professionals have just begun to address in about the last eight years. She said the Office of Student Life receives a varying number of calls from concerned parents - about one or two per week - requesting access to everything from students' academic profiles to their financial records.

"There are federal privacy laws that prohibit us from sharing this information with them," Jones said. "The only way we can give them access to a student's private profile like that, is if the student comes in and signs permission to let them see it. But we can't do that without the student's approval."

Jones also said she has received many phone calls and e-mails from parents and other relatives of students who are concerned about the students' well-being. For example, if the student is struggling in a class or is dealing with a personal issue, she said.

"When somebody contacts us like that, we take it seriously," Jones said. "We definitely always let the student know that 'Hey, someone is concerned about you,' and then we leave it up to them to decide what to do with it. But we also let them know that we're here if they need anything."

Parents have more say in their students' college activities and career choices than in the past. These parents are known as "hovering" or "helicopter" parents.

Local group sues Manhattan for breaking redevelopment agreement

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A community group has filed a lawsuit against the City of Manhattan because of alleged violations the city made in regards to the downtown redevelopment project. Today, a judge is scheduled to determine if the first part of the suit will go forward.

Manhattan Citizens for Sustainable Downtown Redevelopment was formed a few months ago in response to the City Commission's decision to overturn the recommendation by the planning board on an amendment to the downtown redevelopment, said Debbie Nuss, one of the group's leaders. MCSDR is a private, non-profit group incorporated with the state of Kansas, she said.

The amendment in question increased the amount of space available for the Hy-Vee grocery store from a previous maximum size of 68,000 square feet to at least 78,000 square feet, with a maximum 93,000 square feet, Nuss said.

The group, along with Garcia-Quaintance Apartments, the Manhattan/Riley County

Preservation Alliance and seven community members, filed a petition in mid-February that alleged the city of Manhattan violated procedural issues when the amendment was adopted, according to a statement on the group's Web site.

"At the very least, we want our city officials to follow the rules and the laws that are provided to protect the community's interest in this type of situation," Nuss said.

City Attorney William Frost said he didn't have much to say about the lawsuit, but that he had spoken with the plaintiffs' lawyer.

Ronald Schneider, a Lawrence-based lawyer with experience in land use and preservation lawsuits, is representing MCSDR and the other plaintiffs.

The lawsuit has two parts - it deals with both a preservation statute and a zoning statute, Schneider said.

The preservation statute issue is scheduled to be heard in court today, while the zoning statute will be discussed at a later date, Schneider said.

The plaintiffs are arguing that the state historic preservation officer was not given proper notice of the amendment as required by law, Schneider said.

Three historic sites - Damon Runyon House, Community House and the Downtown Manhattan Historic District - are located within 500 feet of the development area, and therefore, the city should have alerted the preservation officer, who would have determined if those areas might be negatively affected by the amendment's changes, Nuss said.

IN AFRICA

- AIDS deaths in Sub-Saharan Africa represent 72% of global AIDS deaths.

- Only 23% of people in sub-Saharan Africa in need of antiretroviral therapy are receiving it.

- About 1 in 5 adults in Zimbabwe is living with HIV; the estimated life expectancy for men is 37 years and 34 years for women.

CITY COMMISSION

City Commission approves area improvements to city park, RCSC

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commission unanimously passed all consent agenda items, including designating a new City Park Pavilion and several other improvements to the Manhattan area.

A request to authorize the city to receive design proposals for a new pavilion with restrooms generated discussion on the consent agenda item. Phillips asked how important the construction of a new pavilion was in comparison to the pool projects slated for repair this year.

"All I can tell you is that the building was built in the '20s," said Curtis Loupe, parks and recreation director. "As for where it ranks ... it depends on the season. I think the pavilion offers an opportunity our community can use."

Jami Ramsey, director of Riley County Senior Center, requested the city provide $25,000 to help fund the $50,000 remodeling of the bathrooms in the RCSC.

The bathrooms currently are not meeting the Americans with Disabilities Act and city health codes, Ramsey said.

The restrooms need new flooring, toilets, hand rails and a fresh coat of paint.

"I believe the citizens of Manhattan want a clean, efficient senior center," Commissioner Bob Strawn said.

The commission voted 5-0-0 in support of the project with the contingency that Riley County match the city's donations.

Jerry Snyder, Manhattan fire chief, presented a request for proposal to build a new fire station on Vanesta Drive and move Fire Station Three to Amherst Drive.

Snyder said the fire stations would reduce the average response time of 6.4 minutes to within the five-minute standard set by Snyder.

Cliff Malone, a Manhattan citizen in attendance, voiced his concern about the noise levels increasing with the possible fire station construction along Amherst Drive.

City Manager Ron Fehr said relocating Station Three eliminates the necessity of building another fire station in the Miller Ranch division, saving the city thousands of dollars.

The commission voted 5-0-0 in support of the new fire stations.

Mayor Tom Phillips opened Tuesday night's meeting by declaring March 10-16 Brain Awareness Week, in recognition of the pilot clubs in the Manhattan area and their efforts to guide the community concerned with brain disorders, such as autism, Alzheimer's, schizophrenia and communication disorders.

Shilo Heger, president of the Pilot Club of Manhattan, and Betty Holder, president of the Sunflower Pilot Club, were present to receive the proclamation from the mayor.

CAMPUS CRIME

Students discover property damaged, stolen on K-State campus this weekend

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several thefts and a hit-and-run accident occurred this weekend on the K-State campus.

A white 2004 Ford Focus was reported stolen from the B3 parking lot, according to a K-State Police report.

The B3 parking lot is located on the north side of campus next to North Manhattan Avenue. The theft occurred between the hours of 3 a.m. and 2:45 p.m. Feb. 28 - 29. The vehicle was registered in a Texas county but belongs to a K-State student. Capt. Richard Herrman of the K-State Police Department said police currently do not have any suspects and are investigating the crime.

A 2003 blue Honda Civic was involved in a hit and run in front of Danforth and All Faiths Chapel. The Honda was parked and struck by an unknown vehicle between 12:45 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. on Saturday, Herrman said.

A Moore Hall resident discovered his bike missing after midnight March 3. The $1,000 Specialized 24 brand racing bicycle was taken from the bike racks north of Eisenhower Hall. The word "Specialized" is in white on the crossbar and the handlebars are white.

A silver Pathfinder store sticker is on the frame, according to the police report. The bike was locked to the bike rack, but the cable was also missing when the victim found the bike, Herrman said.

Also this weekend, K-State Police were the first responders to a robbery at 12th and Ratone streets. K-State Police found the victim and went into the area to look for suspects. No other information was released, Herrman said.

Political circus

Candidates nothing but clowns

As this is being written, Democratic candidates are hashing out their last-ditch efforts to keep their campaigns alive by winning the states of Texas and Ohio. So, ladies and gentlemen, kids of all ages — come one, come all to the great political circus of 2008.

BRETT KING

As we near the end of the state primaries leading up to the Republican and Democratic national conventions, many voters are beginning to realize how each party has put forth candidates who have no business or experience running this country.

With fun-house mirrors, candidate Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., enters the tent showing people distorted images of his experience and the future.

In pre-recessionary times, people are struggling and looking for hope and change, but Obama supporters and colleagues in the Senate cannot even name one legislative accomplishment.

On Feb. 19, Chris Matthews of MSNBC's "Hardball" point-blank asked state Sen. Kirk Watson, D-Texas, to name one of Obama's legislative accomplishments. Watson failed to name one and didn't see this as a problem. He wanted to talk about "what [Obama] offers the American people," and "how [Obama] inspires people."

Jumping through hoops of fire like a tiger, Republican Party candidate John "make sure you get my good side" McCain, is trying to change his stripes to get conservative support.

Conservatives were given a treat when Sen. McCain, Ariz.—R, allowed a Freudian slip expressing his true political beliefs. In a speech given in Richardson, Texas, last week, McCain said, "I'm a proud conservative liberal Republican ... conservative Republican."

Up above on the trapeze swings is Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., going back and forth between being a strong individual and a babbling brook of tears.

Conservatives have been shaking their head for weeks about McCain's expected nomination, but all eyes have been on the Democratic Party nomination.

Similar to the 1964 Goldwater/Johnson election, Clinton has started to use fear tactics in commercials and videos to undermine Obama.

Right before election night, Johnson aired an attack ad against Goldwater depicting a little girl picking petals from a flower while a narrator counted down a launch sequence. Once the countdown hit zero, a nuclear bomb went off. In a recent commercial, Clinton used images of a sleeping child to ask who the public would prefer to have answer a 3 a.m. phone call in the event of a terrorist attack.

McCain should get down on his knees and pray he has the chance to go against Clinton in the general election. Facing off against Obama would remind people of the Nixon vs. Kennedy debate. Hands-down Nixon won the debate, however, he looked tired and old next to Kennedy.

For months, Clinton has caught a lot of flack from the ultra-liberal base of the Democratic Party because she has voted for all the bills requesting more funding for the troops in Iraq. This angered many Democratic voters who are frustrated with the current situation and do want change.

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Providing side-show entertainment, Ralph Nader has once again made himself an independent candidate for the 2008 election and could once again take away votes from a Democratic candidate just like he did in the 2000 election.

Nader would only be an effective spoiler for the Republican Party if Clinton gets the nod from her party.

This circus election will be broadcast into our homes and displayed on our nightly news. Grab the popcorn and peanuts, maybe a soda or two; watch a political spectacle that many people just wish was almost through.

Protests over Danish cartoons produce opposite effects

It has been close to three years since the publication of controversial cartoons of the prophet Muhammad in the Danish newspaper Jyllands-Posten. Regardless, the flames from that fire have not even begun to die.

GRADY BOLDING

Jyllands-Posten published a series of caricatures in September 2005 that depicted the Prophet Muhammad in a less-than-playful light. The one most people are familiar with depicts the Prophet Muhammad wearing a lit bomb in his turban. In response, several protests against Denmark raged throughout the Muslim world in 2005.

Yeah, I'll admit I can see such cartoons as offensive. And I have no religion.

Unfortunately, even now, it's not over. A Feb. 13 Agence France-Presse article reported that Denmark reprinted the controversial cartoons following an incident which involved two Tunisians and a Moroccan Dane who plotted to assassinate one of the newspaper's cartoonists. In response to the re-publication of the cartoons, protesters from the Middle East to Indonesia took to the streets again. Better yet, the Associated Press reported that Omar al-Bashir, the president of Sudan, called for a boycott of Denmark to a crowd of thousands chanting, "Down, down, Denmark!"

Unfortunately for al-Bashir, he does not seem familiar with the oldest rule of controversy: It sells.

In this case, protesting and boycotting Denmark won't help anything. All it does is increase the celebrity status of the cartoonists and makes the culprits behind the protests look like a bunch of idiots.

One just has to look at a few examples to prove my point, including the infamous "The Satanic Verses" by Salman Rushdie. The plot involves Indian expatriates in modern-day England who magically take on the personalities of an archangel and a devil.

I read it and hated it. It had a stupid premise and an even more ridiculous chain of events. However, the controversy lies in two segments. The first is a re-narration of an incident where Muhammad was tricked by Satan into proclaiming revelations that favored polytheistic deities — the Prophet later retracted these statements. The second and most offensive controversy happens when the reader is introduced to a brothel where all the prostitutes happen to have the names of all of Muhammad's wives.

Offensive and repulsive, you bet.

It was these two passages that brought protests throughout the Muslim world similar to those we see today. However, nothing really hit the fan until Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini came on the scene in 1989. He put a bounty on Rushdie's head, offering a reward to both Muslims and non-Muslims to assassinate Rushdie. Thus, Khomeini sealed Rushdie's fate as one of the greatest authors of our time because of some lame excuse for a novel.

Now, I know what some might be thinking. How will ignoring such obscenities be effective?

I have an answer. Just look at the online Jesus-Christ-action-figure commercial by Kontraband. In this video, intended to be a comical farce, the viewer sees a depiction of young kids playing with the Christ figure. They go so far as to recreate the crucifixion. Finally, it all ends with the narrator saying, "Go ahead. Throw the first stone."

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Blasphemous. I know.

However, why was this never a controversy here in the United States, especially among the religious right, which has never been known to turn down protesting Hollywood depictions of Jesus in a revolutionary light? Simple, they knew nothing about it. Nobody did. And there was no bloodshed.

Bottom line: Sudan's

Denmark boycott is another example of how to marginalize peoples' names in history books forever. No doubt, the cartoons were offensive and blasphemous. However, by gaining more and more attention over the fact, Sudan is only marginalizing a Danish newspaper over cartoons.

Good grief. Charles Shultz is probably rolling over in his grave over this.

TO THE POINT

Eventually, students should take over own lives

Parents leaving work early to hurry to their child's play or music recital is common and often expected. As children get older, constant attention and parents' involvement usually becomes less intense, and eventually the child becomes an independent and self-sufficient adult. Our generation, however, experiences much more parental involvement and attention much later into childhood and even adulthood.

It is definitely a good trend that more parents are taking an active role in the lives and well-being of their kids. Eventually, however, sons and daughters should be allowed to handle their own problems and make their own decisions independently.

The involvement of parents in their adult-age children is apparent when observing K-State's recruitment of high school and junior college students. Not only does the university send recruiting material to the prospective student but also to the parents. Most individuals who are old enough to drive, vote, smoke, buy a gun and serve our country have the good judgement to make decisions for themselves, especially about where they would like to attend college.

This is also evident in the fact that many companies now contact the parents of recent graduates who are prospective employees. These companies understand the role parents play in the lives of many people in their early 20s, and they recruit parents just as much as students.

We applaud the parents who are dedicated to seeing their children mature and lead a happy and healthy life, but parents should not expect to make decisions for their children forever. Adults should be able to direct their lives in anyway they choose, and if an adult's parents do not allow this to happen, that son or daughter will have a much more difficult time adapting to everyday life as he or she gets older.

K-STATE CLUBS

Campus group aims to stop rape nonviolently by promoting awareness

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildcats Against Rape was started by students after a female student was sexually assaulted at Rusty's Last Chance in the bathroom.

Abby Heraud, graduate student in modern languages, said students had heard enough acts of violence against other students, so they decided to do something about it. Though the group started in a class, it grew into a student group for everyone on campus to join.

W.A.R. has about 200 members on its online mailing list, and a fourth of those members are constantly involved with the organization. Meetings are at 6:30 p.m. on the last Tuesday of every month at different locations.

Heraud said 412 people are raped every year on average in a school the size of K-State. This year W.A.R. has organized a benefit concert at The Dusty Bookshelf on April 12. Heraud said the date, 4/12, is fitting because it symbolizes the average number of people who will be assaulted or raped. This benefit, which is an opportunity for the organization to educate others about rape and prevention, will include four bands.

Heraud said she thinks the only way to change and prevent these actions are for people to start treating on another with more respect.

"For cryin' out loud, be nice to each other," she said.

Mary Todd, director of sexual assault advocacy and the Women's Center, said W.A.R. helps encourage people to start standing up for others and prevent rapes or assaults in a non-violent way.

"As individuals," Todd said, "we are able to decide what kind of life we want to live, and it is a right that everyone should live without fear of something happening."

She also said individuals should want to live in honor and help people stay safe.

W.A.R. wants women to stop giving up their freedoms to be safe, Todd said. Preventing and stopping bad behavior will help everyone to be safer wherever they are, she said.

Todd said W.A.R. is working to create a culture at K-State in which rapes or assaults do not occur and individuals hold a higher standard

W.A.R. also helps to educate students by speaking at University Experience classes and other classes that ask the organization to talk about rape and prevention.

Todd said she encourages students to reach out, rather than be quiet, if something has happened to them.

"You learn how to help people and be respectful because we all have different ways of getting through different traumas," Allen said.

Michelle Painter, W.A.R. secretary, said she joined W.A.R. because it educates about what can happen and how to prevent rapes.

"[W.A.R.] can be a support group, education group, and be fun because you get to know more people," Painter, a junior in English said. "We want to get the word out about this."

Fressfest promotes German language, food, serves as fundraiser to bring speakers

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In an effort to promote the German culture, K-State's German Club will be host to a Fressfest tonight in the International Student Center at 7.

The word "Fressfest" has been used by the German Club for a couple of years as a joke, Chris Lemon, president of German Club and senior finance, said. The word

"fress" comes from the German word "fressen," which means to feed in reference to animals.

The event will be potluck-style, and everyone will cook a German dish. Lemon said the event will serve as a way for students, especially those studying the language, to learn about German culture.

"You can learn a language in a classroom, but by having clubs, you can connect with the culture and meet people who speak the language," Lemon said.

Everyone is invited and those who do not bring a dish are encouraged to make a donation to the German Club. Those interested in attending or cooking a German dish do not have to be members of the German Club, Lemon said.

Beside promoting German culture, the event is a fundraiser to bring Bernd Neumann from the Norwegian University of Science and Technology to K-State. Neumann is a German professor at the university and an expert on Franz Kafka, a famous 20th century German writer.

K-State is just one of many universities Neumann will visit on his U.S. tour.

"The most important thing to remember is that this is an attempt to internationalize the campus by bringing scholars from abroad," Peter Arnds, professor of German and Italian, said.

Those planning to attend the Fressfest are encouraged to inform Lemon so he can estimate how much food is needed.

Future fundraising events will include a barbecue in April, Lemon said.

"People can come together and experience German culture and language; you can meet people who are interested in the same things you are," said Ren Stange, vice president of German Club and junior in German.

The German Club has weekly meetings at 7 p.m. Wednesdays at Bluestem Bistro. It is also a great way to get help with learning the language or working on German homework, Stange said.

Beasley breaks more records but Stewart steals the show

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior guard Clint Stewart addressed the crowd - and one person in particular - when he took the microphone during the salute to the seniors Tuesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

"Thanks to the student section," Stewart said. "You guys are amazing. Y'all have been supporting myself for four years. It's been the ride of my life. I appreciate everything. Thank you very much."

After he thanked the coaching staff, he brought his girlfriend, Stephanie Harwell, to the microphone, handed her a bouquet of purple and red roses, got down on one knee and proposed to her in front of the 12,528 K-State fans. Stewart said he got coach Frank Martin's permission to do it Sunday.

"I knew it was coming because he didn't want to take away from the game," Martin said. "I told him, 'Clint, man, you've earned the right to do whatever you want to do on senior night.' It was a beautiful thing."

During the game, freshman forward Michael Beasley's 33 points and 14 rebounds led K-State to a 78-72 victory over Colorado, and Beasley set two more records in the process. With his 26th double-double of the season, he set the single-season Big 12 Conference double-double record, which was previously set by Kansas' Drew Gooden in the 2001-02 season.

Beasley also broke Mitch Richmond's 1987-88 record for points in a single-season - Richmond finished with

768. Beasley currently has 779 points on the year with one game left in the regular season. He is the only K-State player in the school's history to have four consecutive 30-point games.

"It don't mean anything to me," Beasley said. "I don't care about individual records. I'm trying to get to the NCAA Tournament. It's the first time we've been to the tournament in a long time. They can keep their individual records. I just want to get to the tournament."

K-State (19-10, 9-6 Big 12) started the game on a 13-4 run, capped off by a three-pointer by freshman forward Bill Walker. K-State led by as much as 17 in the first half with 9:38 left on a three-pointer by Beasley.

However, Colorado kept chipping at K-State's lead, getting as close as 14 at half. TCU Buffaloes (11-18, 3-12 Big 12) started off the second half strong, eventually getting as close as three points within

NBA Playoffs to be memorable

The NBA's All-Star Weekend happened a little over two weeks ago. The three-day event, which marks the midway point in the NBA season, was full of thunderous dunks, incredible passes and ridiculous shots.

Now that the annual break is over, many teams in the NBA have turned their focus toward making a run at the playoffs and possibly winning a championship. What is unfolding before fans' eyes is something that promises to be memorable.

THE EASTERN CONFERENCE

The Eastern Conference is essentially a four-team race and the Boston Celtics lead the pack, looking like the unstoppable dynasty of the 1960s. Behind superstars Kevin Garnett, Ray Allen and Paul Pierce, the Celtics own the NBA's best record at 46-12. Now, with the addition of seasoned veteran Sam Cassell, all the pieces look to be in place for the Celtics to win the NBA Championship for the first time since 1986.

Right behind the Celtics is the perennial powerhouse, the Detroit Pistons. Ever since their defeat of the Lakers, 4-1, in the 2004 NBA Finals, they have been among the NBA's elite. Built around a strong foundation of suffocating defense and disciplined offense, the Pistons annually make deep playoff runs.

The third best team in the Eastern Conference is the Orlando Magic. Built around third-year center Dwight Howard, the Magic supplements his sensational athleticism with veteran talent like perennial All-Star Rashard Lewis and Jameer Nelson.

The Cleveland Cavaliers have the fourth-best record in the Eastern Conference. The Cavaliers have surrounded LeBron "King" James with the tools necessary to make a serious run at a championship. The addition of Ben Wallace gives the Cavaliers a strong defensive presence on the block, and with Daniel Gibson and Wally Szczerbiak, the Cavaliers have several reliable options in case LeBron has an off night.

THE WESTERN CONFERENCE

I don't know if there has ever been a race as close as what is taking place in the Western Conference. Three games separate the top seed, the San Antonio Spurs and the seventh seed, the Dallas Mavericks. One bad week for any of these teams, and their season could be over.

The San Antonio Spurs are once again at the top of the mix. Behind Tim Duncan, the Spurs have a three-headed monster that, on any given night, can score between 60 and 90 points. Tony Parker is among the quickest guards in the NBA and Manu Ginobili is quietly averaging more than

K-STATE VS. KU

When: 7 tonight
Where: Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence, Kan.

the court together?

We are addicted to MTV, so we watch that a lot. I live with Shalee [Lehning] and Marlies [Gipson], so we like to play some "Guitar Hero."

I hear a lot about "Guitar Hero," who's the best?

Shalee is really good. Marlies and I are working our way up to hard, but right now we are down on medium, but it gets pretty intense.

The guys play a lot of games too, can they take you guys on in "Guitar Hero"?

No, they couldn't handle us; they definitely couldn't handle us.

Does anybody compare to you in being girly?

Me and Kari [Kincaid] like to swap clothes a lot.

Who is the funniest player on this team? Could it be you?

We are all funny - we like to quote "Wedding Crashers." Like me and Ashley Sweat, we are always quoting movies, but Marlies is the probably the wittiest one.

What's your favorite line from any movie?

Probably something from "Napoleon Dynamite" like, [in Napoleon's voice], "Eat the food, Tina."

What's your favorite movie?

I just saw "American Gangster," and that is one of my tops. "Love and Basketball" is probably everybody's, but "American Gangster" is one of my tops.

Who is the craziest freshman on the team?

I'm always picking on Kelsey Hill, but they are all great freshman to have.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

No. 70-ranked Tennis team to open Big 12 play at KU

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis team held on to its ranking in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association poll last week. It will have to protect that position today when Kansas comes to town to open the Big 12 Conference season for the Wildcats.

No. 70-ranked K-State (4-3, 0-0 Big 12) is coming off three straight losses after starting the season strong with wins against Syracuse, Saint Louis and Wichita State. Following the Wildcats' win against WSU, they were ranked No. 68 in the ITA poll, their first ranking of the season. Their last three losses have come at the hands of No. 42 Tulsa, No. 66 Utah and No. 56 Brigham Young. In Big 12 openers, K-State is 7-4 overall.

The team has won three straight against Kansas (3-5, 0-0 Big 12). Kansas is led by junior Edina Horvath, who has a 5-1 singles record at the No. 2 position.

The matches will begin at 2 p.m. with doubles play. Singles play will follow the conclusion of the doubles matches.

The location of the matches will be determined Wednesday afternoon based on weather.

If the weather is below 50 degrees, the matches will be played indoors at Ahearn Field House. If it is above 50, they will be played at the Washburn Tennis Facility at the Peters Recreation Complex.

ESPN.COM NEWS SERVICES

After flirting with retirement for years, Brett Favre means it this time.

The Green Bay Packers quarterback quit Tuesday after a 17-season career in which he dazzled fans with his grit, heart and rocket of an arm.

"I know I can still play, but it's like I told my wife, I'm just tired mentally. I'm just tired," Favre, a three-time NFL MVP and Super Bowl champion, told ESPN's Chris Mortensen in a voice mail message.

"If I felt like coming back - and Deanna [his wife] and I talked about this - the only way for me to be successful would be to win a Super Bowl. To go to the Super Bowl and lose, would almost be worse than anything else. Anything less than a Super Bowl win would be unsuccessful," Favre said in the message.

"I know it shouldn't feel unsuccessful, but the only way to come back and make that be the right decision would be to come back and win a Super Bowl. And honestly, the odds of that, they're tough. Those are big shoes for me to fill, and I guess it was a challenge I wasn't up for."

Packers coach Mike

McCarthy told Mortensen that Favre called him Monday night to tell him his decision.

He also said Favre had first mentioned the possibility of retiring on Thursday.

"He called me last night to tell me he'd thought this thing through and he said, 'Well, you know how it is, and I'm just tired and I just think it's time,'" McCarthy said.

"And I did tell him last Thursday when he mentioned retirement for the first time, I told him while we talked that he did have to trust his heart."

The news was a surprise to at least one of Favre's teammates.

Most players expected Favre to return after a successful 2007 season.

The (Real) Mission of St. Patrick

Fake St. Patty's Day has a tradition of bringing hundreds, maybe even thousands, of students to Aggieville for an all-day green beer fest. But few people know why St. Patrick's Day is really celebrated.

The following is an excerpt of an article that was written by Heidi Bright and taken from the March 8, 1983, Collegian. In her column, Bright explains who the real St. Patrick was and why we get to celebrate him this Saturday in The 'Ville.

St. Patrick was not born an Irishman.

Reading this in a 1980 HIS magazine and in some encyclopedias surprised me.

Magnus Sucatus Patricius was English. He did, however, spend 36 years on the Isle of Green. He went twice — both times against his will.

Patrick was the son of a deacon who was also a minor member of the nobility. Patrick spent his youth living in a villa by the sea.

When he was 16, Irish pirates attacked his home and carried him off, along with some of the servants.

Off to Ireland he went for the first time. The pirates sold him into slavery to a Druid tribal chieftain, and he herded swine for six years.

Eventually, out of sheer hopelessness of his situation, he turned to God and underwent a spiritual transformation. Years later he wrote about his experience in Confessio.

"I was 16 and knew not the true God," he wrote, "but in a strange land the Lord opened my unbelieving eyes, and I was converted."

His utter devotion to God caused those around him to tag him "Holy-Boy." He lived up to this name.

"Love and reverence for God came to me more and more, building up my faith so much that daily I would pray a hundred times or more," he wrote.

His devotion to prayer aided him many times through his life. For starters, it aided his escape from slavery. One night, he wrote, he heard a voice which told him that a ship lay waiting to take him back to England.

He sneaked away from his master, and after a 200-mile trek, came to a ship bound for England.

The captain refused him admittance, but as Patrick walked away and started to pray, a crew member yelled to him to come aboard. Patrick set sail for his homeland.

Eventually Patrick wandered home. He didn't stay for long, though.

One night in a dream a man handed him a letter with the opening words: "The Voice of the Irish." Patrick wrote that as he read the letter, he seemed to hear the beseeching voices of those who lived where he had one been a slave. "Holy-Boy, we beg you, come walk among us again."

Patrick did not want to go back; he was beset by fears but he felt compelled to return as a missionary to those who had enslaved him.

"I did not go back to Ireland of my own accord," he wrote. "It was the furthest thing from me, but God made me fit, causing me to care about and labour for the salvation of others."

Patrick sold his inheritance to pay his way to Ireland.

A breakthrough in Patrick's ministry occurred on March 26 in A.D. 433 — a day on which both the Druids would call the sun back into the northern hemisphere and Easter happened to fall.

During this yearly pagan ritual, the Druids would put out all the fires throughout Ireland, and the chief wizard would build a bonfire on top of a mountain.

Patrick, in turn, built a bonfire on a neighboring hill to celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Light of the World.

Troops were sent by the Druids to bring Patrick before them, and the demanded an explanation for his actions. Patrick explained to them the mystery of the Incarnate God; the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the Trinity.

Before the eighth century, legends were swirling around this historic event, and other legends cropped up alongside it. One holds that Patrick drove all the snakes out of Ireland.

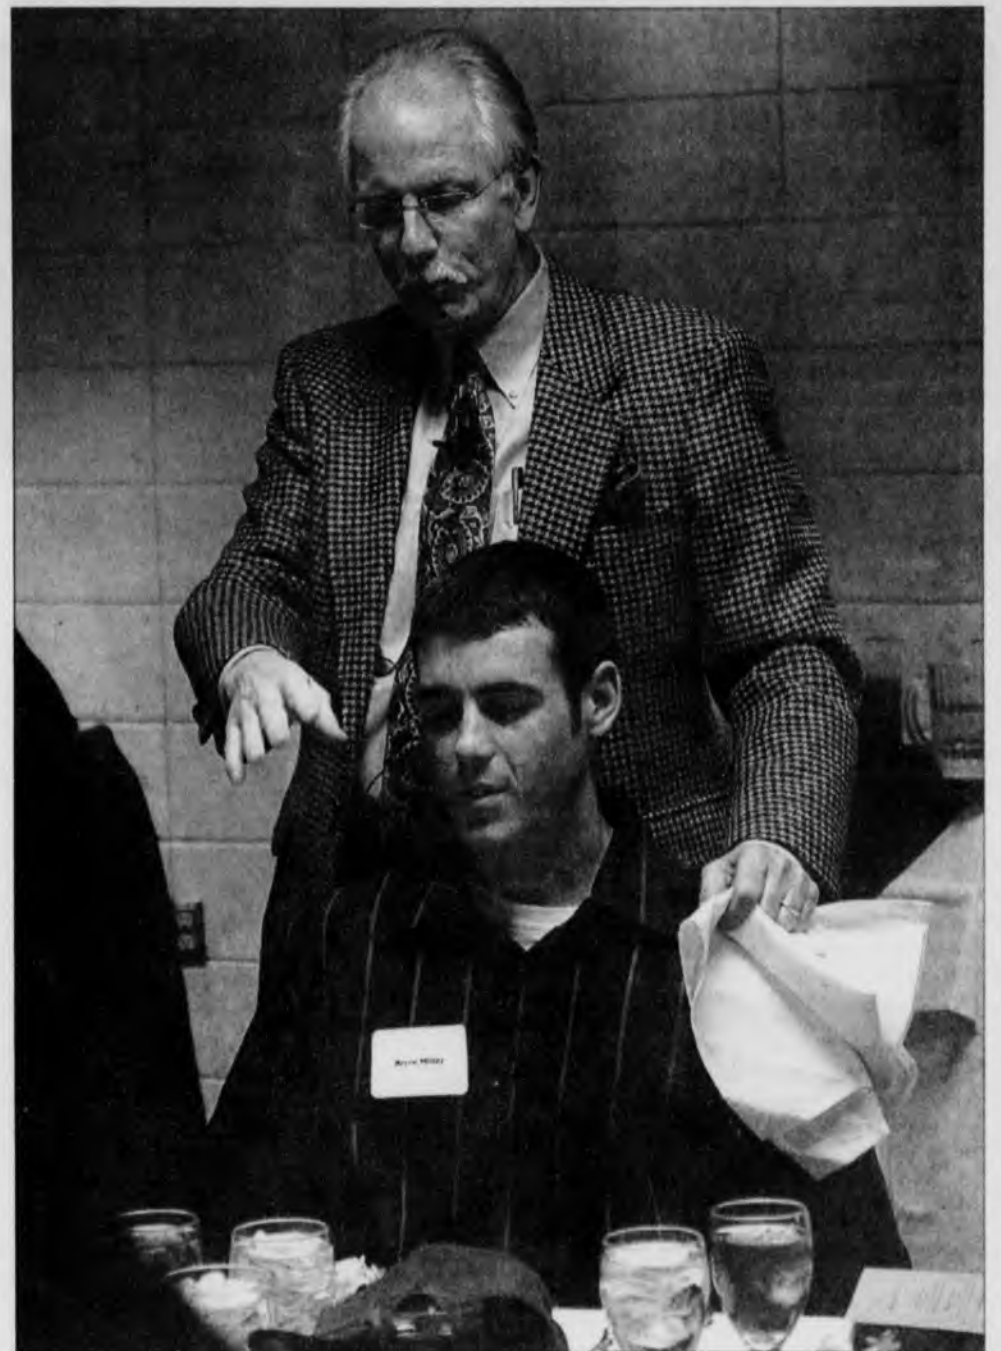

Another legend holds that Patrick used the three-leaf clover to explain the concept of the Trinity — three persons in one God. This legend was taken one step further to celebrate the Irish patron saint. Now, on March 17, the Irish wear the national flower of Ireland, the shamrock, in their lapels.

Whether these legends hold truth or not, the results of Patrick's ministry are clear — the Christian message obtained credence among the Irish. After 30 years of laboring, about 100,000 people became Christians.

Patrick changed the course of the nation by providing education for the multitudes, raising the status of women from possessions to people and helping the end slavery.

Group to sponsor Indian film festival

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Indian Student Association has planned a free, five-film Indian movie festival that will run today through March 12 in the K-State Student Union.

The Hindi-language films will have English subtitles, except for "Sivaji," and admission is free, said ISA member Nidhi Tare, graduate student in electrical engineering.

The films will be "Bommarillu," 6 tonight in Forum Hall; "Rang De Basanti," 3 p.m. Sunday in the Union Ballroom; "Sivaji," 6 p.m. March 10 in Forum Hall; "Chak De India," 6 p.m. March 11 in Forum Hall; and "Welcome," 6 p.m. March 12 in Forum Hall, Tare said.

"In an attempt to capture the various facets of India, we chose movies that highlight the culture, traditions and problems faced within the Indian society," said ISA president Sushanth Gudlur, graduate student in biochemistry.

"Bommarillu" deals with young people's roles in Indian families, while "Rang De Basanti" and "Sivaji" deal with history and social issues, Tare said.

"Chak De India" is about field hockey, India's national game, Tare said. The final film, "Welcome," is a comedy, she said.

All the movies were made in 2006 or 2007, Gudlur said.

There are many differences between Indian and American films, said ISA faculty advisor Bala Natarajan, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering.

Among the differences found in Indian films are an emphasis on music and dance, and a tendency for the films to be melodramatic and longer in length than many American films, Natarajan said.

The festival is funded by the Diversity Programming Council and co-sponsored by the Union Program Council, she said.

Horticulture students offer healing through plant life

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With only about 15 K-State undergraduate students in the program, horticultural therapy might not seem like it would be a huge draw for K-State. But it is one of the few universities that offers this program and was one of the first to adopt the major.

Undergraduate students from around the United States and graduate students from all over the world come to K-State to study horticultural therapy, said Richard Mattson, professor of horticulture and coordinator of the horticultural therapy program.

"We have quite a diverse background," he said.

Mattson said K-State was the first school to offer the bachelor of science curriculum, master's degrees and doctoral degrees in horticultural therapy.

In Kansas, this type of therapy is directed more towards humans, he said. In the 1960s, a psychiatric hospital in Topeka formed K-State's therapy program with the idea that plants can help reduce stress, and help people with mental or developmental disabilities use plants to heal.

"It's for people with all kinds of disadvantages," Mattson said. "Horticulture can be the answer to some of their problems."

QiuXia Chen, junior in horticulture, transferred from Unity College in Maine to study at K-State. She said she would like to work with kids and have her own therapy clinic someday. She is currently planning therapy programs for residents at Meadowlark Hills, a retirement home in Manhattan, as part of a class.

"It's an on-site, hands-on experience," Chen said. "I get an opportunity to work with people I'm not used to working with. It gives me a chance to see what it's like."

She said the basic ac-

QiuXia Chen, junior in horticulture, trims a grapefruit plant after re-potting it in one of the Throckmorton Hall greenhouses Tuesday afternoon.

tions involved in gardening—digging holes and planting seeds—help people release frustrations or emotions caused by physical, emotional, or mental disabilities.

"It's a way to express yourself and connect with the things you're working with," Chen said.

She said she is calmer, happier and more relaxed when she is working with plants. She wants to teach her clients how to garden so they might feel that way too, she said.

In addition to schools and retirement homes, prisons sometimes offer gardening opportunities. Mattson said all prisons in Kansas have horticultural programs. Chen said these programs offer prisoners a way to be productive and release energy at the same time. It gives them something positive to work toward and get them involved in society, she said.

"[They've] changed, and now they can do something for other people," Chen said.

But people don't have to be diagnosed with a disability or be confined to do horticultural therapy; Chen said anyone can do it. Students who graduate with this degree often start their own businesses where they can hold one-on-one or group sessions.

Horticultural therapy is not federally funded, however, so horticultural therapists often work under the titles of other types of therapy, Chen said.

She said she would like to set up a horticultural therapy program that wouldn't just be about individual clients, but about the community as well.

"I want to go into the community and not just change the client but change the way people view them," Chen said, referring to clients with disabilities. "[I want it to be about] how people can work in society and how society can work with them."

Chen said she has seen her therapy programs affect the residents at Meadowlark Hills in a positive way. She said they talk about the plants she brings for them to see and touch.

This helps them recall information and use different parts of their brains, which helps with memory loss.

One program Chen designed involved citrus fruits. The residents got to feel the different fruits, peel them, describe the different types of flesh, and then plant the seeds.

These programs give the residents opportunities to learn and share their stories with other people, she said.

"I've always loved gardening and working with plants, and I love working with people too," Chen said. "I hope to use my passion for gardening and share that with them. Hopefully it will make their lives better too."

ROUNDABOUT | 2 lanes to be wide enough for larger trucks

close and traffic often backs up past those intersections, said assistant city manager Jason Hilgers.

"The coordination of those lights is really the biggest issue there," he said.

He said the roundabout should alleviate this problem by keeping traffic moving and eliminating the stop lights on Third Street. Hilgers also said the roundabout will probably be two lanes and will be wide enough to handle large vehicles like semi-trucks.

"They've modeled it with 18-wheelers in mind, so they are more than adequate to handle those vehicles," he said.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said the roundabout will be important to traffic flow in the area, especially with the redevelopment of downtown.

The city plans to build a Hy-Vee grocery store close to the intersection and other retail stores will be built farther south on Fourth Street.

"I think it's unique, at a key location, and it will be important to the downtown redevelopment," Snead said.

Eugene Russell, K-State emeritus professor of civil engineering who has studied roundabouts for several years, said many people confuse roundabouts with other traffic-control devices. He said Manhattan has only one roundabout on Kimball Avenue near Colbert Hills Golf Course. The smaller traffic circles in several places in Manhattan are not roundabouts; they serve to slow traffic.

"They're meant to be roadblocks, and in that sense, they're effective," he said.

COURTESY ART

Russell also said problems arise because drivers often forget common driving guidelines when entering roundabouts. He said it is no different than any other intersection — drivers should yield to oncoming traffic and stay in their specified lane. "Drivers have to use some sense and learn the rules of the road," Russell said. "A lot of the problem is that people get on the roundabouts and forget the rules of the road."

SUIT | Groups might target other areas of redevelopment

The plaintiffs' second argument was that citizens were not given proper time to protest the amendment between the Jan. 7 planning board meeting and Jan. 8 City Commission meeting, Nuss said.

"We're asserting that citizens have a right to a 14-day protest period in which to appeal a decision, and that wasn't allowed for with the way that the meetings were scheduled," Nuss said.

Schneider said the approval of the amendment was unreasonable on several grounds, but said he could not go into detail on the subject at this time.

The plaintiffs decided to file the suit after speaking with other citizens who had voiced concern about the amendment at City Council meetings, Nuss said.

Though the amendment affects the planned Hy-Vee, MCSDR is not generally opposed to Hy-Vee as a grocery store chain, Nuss said.

"We would have the same concerns regardless of what kind of store it was," Nuss said. "It just happens to be that the Hy-Vee is the proposed tenant of the space. Our group is opposed to the size of the store and how its configuration negatively affects a historic structure — the Strasser House — and how it negatively impacts the housing that's proposed to be built right behind it."

MCSDR is concerned not only with the lawsuit against the city, but the group is also considering circulating petitions to create ordinances that would put new requirements on parts of the north-end development that have not yet been completed, Nuss said.

MCSDR is not holding regular public meetings, but group information can be found at its Web site, manhattancsdr.blogspot.com.

HOVER | Employers targeting parents

However, Jones also said it's important for families, particularly parents, to recognize that their child needs to grow on their own and learn from these mistakes. She said she has even heard of some parents negotiating job contracts with their child's potential employer following graduation.

"This is only crippling the [child] from achieving success on their own," Jones said.

Rachel Robinson-Keilig, psychology intern with counseling services, agreed with Jones and said it is important for a child to gain independence and make their own decisions.

"If a parent impedes on this process, then it becomes problematic for everyone involved," she said.

Robinson-Keilig also said people need to keep in mind cultural differences when dealing with this issue.

"As typically white, middle-class students, our idea of independence is normal, but in other cultures, it does not always follow this standard," she said. "In some cultures, like in a Hispanic family, it's much more acceptable for the parents to be more involved with steps to being on your own."

Amen, however, said he knows that despite his parents' occasional "helicoptering" moments, he knows they do want him to make his own decisions and get through college without relying on them for total support.

"They've tried to do a pretty good job at cutting the cord," he said. "But it is nice to know I can call them for help or just to talk if I need to."

Watch parties to be broadcast on TV

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Student Governing Association elections started Tuesday morning and will continue until 6 p.m. tonight.

The candidates for student body president will be having watch parties starting around 5 p.m. until the polls close and the results are announced. Lydia Peele will be at Tubby's Sports Bar and Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr will be at Gumby's Pizzeria and Pub, both of which are in Aggieville.

Both watch parties will be broadcast on Cox cable channel 8, Wildcat cable channel 21 and online at KSTATE.TV.

Schurr, senior in electrical engineering, received 19.8 percent of the vote in the primaries, while Peele, senior in mathematics education, received 54.3 percent.

Both candidates said they are hopeful for a good election turnout this evening, though Peele said she's worried too few people will vote in the general elections.

Voter turnout was lower during the primary elections than in previous years.

20 points per game, the highest of his career.

The second seed in the West currently belongs to the Los Angeles Lakers. With Kobe Bryant, the emergence of Andrew Bynum and the addition of forward Pau Gasol, Lakers coach Phil Jackson finally has the three ingredients to his triangle offense, a system that he made famous during his stint with Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls.

The New Orleans Hornets currently sit in the third spot in the West. Chris Paul has emerged as one of the NBA's best point guards. They have another All-Star to pass the ball to in David West. Peja Stojakovic offers a reliable three-point threat, and defensive force Tyson Chandler gives the front line of the Hornets a needed presence.

I don't know what is going to happen this year. I haven't got the slightest idea. If I had to make my bet right now, I would put my money on the Spurs beating the Pistons in a rematch of the 2005 NBA Finals, but with such parity in the NBA, it's impossible to tell what the outcome will be.

All basketball fans should take a seat as the NBA takes us on a wild ride full of unexpected turns as it crowns its true champion.

STEWART | Cats go to Iowa State for final game

seven minutes of play. Senior guard Richard Roby scored 14 of his 15 points in the second half.

"They got some easy baskets off of our turnovers and that allowed them to get back in the game," senior guard Blake Young said. "We broke down on defense, and they got easy layups and wide-open shots."

K-State was eventually able to build the lead back up, mostly on the play of Walker, who had 15 of his 25 points in the final period. Walker ended a recent scoring spell; he only scored nine points Saturday against Kansas and one point Feb. 25 against Texas.

"Bill was just being Bill," Beasley said. "He's had a bad game or two, but you can't get mad at him for having a bad game. Everybody has bad games."

Aside from Beasley and Walker, Stewart had nine, and Young had six. Senior guard James Franklin, who had an assist in his four minutes of play, got his first start as a Wildcat.

"We just needed a win," Martin said. "I don't really care what the score was. We needed a game where we could line up and figure out how to win it."

For Colorado, senior guard Marcus Hall led all scorers with 22 points. Freshman guard Cory Higgins had 12 points and junior forward Jermyn Jackson-Wilson had 10.

The Wildcats have another road game coming up in their final game of the regular season Saturday at Iowa State. The Wildcats are 2-4 on the road this season. Young said the team is still looking for stability away from Bram-lage.

"We've got to keep playing," he said. "We can't think we're already in just because they said it on TV. We need to win the next games coming up. They're very important. Last year, we sat around and waited for our names to come up and they never did, so we had to settle for the NIT. The NIT was alright, but nothing like playing in the NCAA Tournament."

Variety of grocery stores offer fair prices, special foods

Photos by Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Call Hall Dairy Bar on the K-State campus offers a variety of milk, cheese, ice cream and other dairy products.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A little exploring can take people a long way. Students might have thought Wal-Mart and Dillons were the only places to buy affordable groceries. Think again.

Scattered around Manhattan are several stores that offer their own food varieties. Yi's Oriental Market, the Call Hall Dairy Bar and the Eastside Market are just a few local shops that can give your dining table the fresh flair you're craving.

EASTSIDE AND WESTSIDE MARKETS:

Open Monday - Saturday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Sunday, Noon to 6 p.m.
785-776-8111,
www.eastandwestsidemarkets.com
Eastside Location: Next to the Super 8 Motel on U.S. Highway 24 (near Dillons)
Westside Location: Near the Clarion Hotel across from Briggs Auto

The Eastside Market began as a fruit and vegetable stand in the 1950s. Now it has its own building where customers can buy produce, decorations for their homes or gardens, seeds, flowers, plants and the best peaches in the Manhattan area, according to Scott Goldsby, an employee at the market and senior in finance.

"Everybody goes crazy over [the peaches]," Goldsby said. Owner Terry Olsen travels to Kansas City in the summer to buy the Idaho peaches for her store, Goldsby said. "She does really well on that."

Goldsby said the store buys produce that is in season, so it tastes better and the prices can compete with the main grocery stores. For instance, oranges are four for $1 and tomatoes cost $1.79 per pound. Goldsby said local farmers and gardeners will sell their produce to the store in the summer.

Almost all of their products are made or grown in Kansas, Goldsby said. The vegetables and fruits are displayed in barrels and marked by creatively colored signs. The apples spill out of their barrels, making a rainbow on the table. Scoops are placed in the various nut barrels, and several of Kansas sauces, jams and salsas line the back wall.

In the spring and summer, Goldsby said about 150 to 250 customers come into the store each day.

"The whole outside is covered in plants during the summer," Goldsby said. "That's our biggest seller."

YI'S ORIENTAL MARKET:

Open Monday - Saturday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.
785-539-5849
Location: 1030 Colorado St.

On the other side of the spectrum is Yi's Oriental Market, which offers food from Korea, China, Japan, Taiwan, Thailand, Vietnam and the Philippines.

Eunju Yi, who co-owns the store with her husband, said about 90 percent of their customers are Asian. She said both K-State students and Manhattan residents shop there, as well as people from Wamego and Junction City. Sticky rice, which comes in a 25-pound bag, is their best seller, she said.

The store's aisles are packed full of cans and packages from all over Asia — most are labeled in English as well as the native language.

They carry a wide variety of canned and pickled vegetables and fill an entire aisle with cooking sauces, oils, wines, and marinades, including plum and banana sauces.

Juices also vary in flavor, from raspberry to plum to mango. The market also has many varieties of coconut milk for those with a sweet tooth.

CALL HALL DAIRY BAR:

Open Monday - Friday, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Saturday 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.
785-532-1292

Location: Call Hall on Midcampus Drive

The Call Hall Dairy Bar offers ice cream, milk, and cheese made at Call Hall and meat made at K-State's Weber Hall.

Margo Douthit, sophomore in agricultural economics, has been working at the dairy bar since August. She said the ice cream is made at Call Hall on Fridays and the milk is delivered twice per week.

"Quite a few people come in for their meat and dairy," Douthit said.

Eggs cost $1.75 for one dozen, a half gallon of skim milk costs $1.91, and a gallon costs $3.41 (chocolate, whole, and 2 percent milk are also offered). The dairy bar sells butter, cheese curds and cheddar, Monterey jack, and fajita jack cheese blocks made at Call Hall.

They also sell sausage, lamb, beef jerky, barbecue pork and many different cuts of beef from Weber Hall. Call Hall even offers specialties like beef tongue, pigs' feet, and pork liver.

Ice cream cones are sold in addition to half-gallon to three-gallon quantities of Call Hall's signature ice cream.

PEOPLE'S GROCERY COOPERATIVE EXCHANGE:

Open Monday - Friday 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Sat. 9 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Sun. 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.
785-539-4811

Location: 523 S. 17th St.; corner of Fort Riley Boulevard and 17th Street

The People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange is an organic health food store in Manhattan. Stacy Smith, manager of the store, said all of their foods are minimally processed or organic. Though People's Grocery is smaller than a chain grocery store, they offer a wide variety of products.

"We can't buy a ton of quantities, but we make up for that in variety of customer service," Smith said. "We can offer advice and personal experience that larger stores just don't."

Natural beauty products, fair trade coffee, tea, and chocolate, and organic cleaning and paper products constitute some of the store's special stock. Fresh produce and milk contain less pesticides and antibiotics than other stores' products contain.

"We only have one body," Smith said. "Americans are finding out more and more that they're not eating healthy. What you're putting into your body affects how long you'll live."

SUPERGRASS RELEASES 6TH STUDIO ALBUM

Supergrass release their new album, "Diamond Hoo Ha" out March 24th. The album was recorded at the legendary Hansa studios and produced by Nick Launay. (Arcade Fire, Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Nick Cave)

"Diamond Hoo Ha" is Supergrass's sixth studio album and is the band at their exuberant best.

"We wanted a record where you got all of Supergrass," says frontman Gaz of this decisive return to, "The joy, the intensity, the darkness, the melodies. All of those have always been important to us and still are."

ALLEN HAS VOWED TO QUIT PARTYING

The 22-year-old singer — who tragically lost her baby in January and split from the father, Chemical Brothers star Ed Simons, shortly after — revealed her recent heartache has changed her opinion on partying.

She said: "When I was pregnant I stopped drinking and I didn't start again. Then when the baby was gone, I thought, 'That doesn't mean I'm going to go back to how I was.'"

The 'Smile' star — who admitted to taking ecstasy when she was just 14 — years — old — has decided the best way to avoid temptation is to spend her evenings at home.

She added to Britain's Glamour magazine: "I've been sad and quite lonely recently because if you're young, living in London and working in this industry, unless you drink and take a lot of drugs, there's not much to do."

VAN HALEN CANCELS REMAINING TOUR DATES

The band, who had been touring the US with original lead singer David Lee Roth, have allegedly canceled the entire tour because of "issues" with guitarist Eddie Van Halen.

Eddie struggled to play at recent shows after allegedly turning up to the gigs the worse for drink.

Recent concerts in Virginia and Georgia had to be rescheduled until mid-March with no reason given for the postponements.

All hotel reservations for the tour, which was due to run until April 19, have been canceled.

Van Halen formed in 1972 and have sold more than 56 million albums in the U.S. alone.

KING'S KITCHEN

Keeping chicken moist makes dish appealing

While walking through the K-State Student Union on Monday, I ran into a friend of mine and decided I would take a few minutes to stop and talk. We started talking when his friend recognized me from my photo in the paper. She then proceeded to tell me how much she enjoyed reading my recipes.

BRETT KING

Since she enjoyed reading my work, I figured I would let her pick the type of food, and she chose a chicken dish that wouldn't dry out once prepared. Moist chicken can be difficult to prepare, but the key is to not cut into the meat as soon as it has the correct temperature. Instead, let the meat stand for a few minutes before cutting or eating. The juices will stay inside longer, keeping the meat tender.

After spending two years in the dorms, I was a tired of having chicken for what seemed like every meal. The mass-produced food left a bland taste in my mouth.

Because the temperatures outside have not warmed up enough for grilling, I am serving up slow-cooked chicken breasts on a bed of white rice, served with onions, apples and rosemary.

To my weekly readers, if there are requests for certain types of food or themes you would like to see me cover, please send requests to the Collegian at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

I am always open to suggestions.

CHICKEN WITH ONIONS, APPLE, AND ROSEMARY

INGREDIENTS:

-2 pounds of chicken breast, diced into 1 inch chunks
-2 cups sliced onions
-2 apples, cored and diced into half-inch cubes

-1 cup reduced-sodium chicken broth
-1 can cream of celery soup
-1/2 teaspoon salt
-1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
-1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper

-2 tablespoons fresh rosemary leaves, diced
-1 1/2 cups cooked rice (white or brown)

DIRECTIONS:

Place chicken, onions and apples into slow cooker and set aside. In a large bowl, combine chicken broth, soup, salt, black pepper, cinnamon and rosemary. Stir with a whisk until thoroughly incorporated together.

Pour mixture over the ingredients already inside the slow cooker. Allow it to cook in slow cooker for seven to eight hours on low or four to five hours on high.

When cooking the rice, follow instructions printed on the bag. I prefer to use the slow cooking rice instead of the minute rice, but make sure to plan cooking times according to the chicken dish.

Cats clinch share of Big 12 title

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE — With 4:09 left in the game and the K-State lead cut to 52-50 by KU sophomore guard LaChelda Jacobs, the Wildcats' chance at a win and a regular-season Big 12 Conference title seemed to be fading.

Coming directly out of a timeout by K-State coach Deb Patterson, the Wildcats got a three-pointer from senior guard Kimberly Dietz with 3:57 left and held the Jayhawks scoreless for the remainder of the game to win 61-50 and clinch at least a share of the Big 12 Conference regular-season crown. K-State last won the Big 12 title during the 2003-04 season.

If Baylor, which needs a win to tie the Wildcats for the crown, loses its final home game tonight against Oklahoma State, K-State will take sole possession of the regular season title. Patterson said she was proud of her team's run through Big 12 play.

"[K-State's] a team I think through Big 12 regular season was very tough minded, resilient and, regardless of the type of game they might have had to play, they found ways to adjust, to adapt, to make enough big plays and to find themselves in position to be Big 12 champs is extraordinary," Patterson said.

Depending on the Baylor result, K-State will be either the No. 1 seed, with a Bears loss, or the No. 2 seed, with a Baylor win, when the Wildcats play their first game in the Big 12 tournament during second-round action Wednesday at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City.

K-State (21-8, 13-3 Big 12) led by as many as 13 points with 13:20 left in the game, but by the 6:18 mark of the second half the Jayhawks (15-14, 4-12 Big 12) had pulled within seven points with a three-point basket from sophomore guard Kelly Kohn.

After a basket and a free throw from Jacobs, KU closed within four points, and after the Jayhawks pulled within two points at 52-50, Patterson called a timeout.

Patterson later said the

2 lawsuits pending for football coaches

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Football coach Ron Prince and former assistant coach, Raheem Morris, are both being implicated in separate lawsuits filed in February, the Manhattan Mercury reported Wednesday.

In a lawsuit filed Feb. 21, a man claiming to be Prince's former agent filed a suit against him, saying the coach did not pay him $67,500 in payments. Executive Sports Management's Barry Terranova filed the lawsuit. Terranova is the head of the coaching division of the Florida-based company.

According to the lawsuit, Prince ended his contract in October 2007 with the company with three years left on the contract. He still owed $9,000 on his contract for 2007. Terranova is seeking $67,500, which would be the total from now until his five-year contract would have expired.

A separate civil suit against Morris was filed Feb. 26 by K-State, claiming Morris owes the university $106,646 for breach of contract. Morris resigned Jan. 4, 2007, to become the defensive backs coach for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. His contract with K-State was set to expire in March 2009. The university claims Morris should have to pay six months salary, his signing bonus and moving expenses. His contract was worth $200,000 per year, plus a $5,000 signing bonus and fringe benefits.

In the suit, K-State claims there was a provision that said if he left before March 2007, he would have to pay back these figures.

Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, and Robert Swift, junior in political science, share a victory hug after winning the 2008 Student Government Association election Wednesday evening at Tubby's Sports Bar.

Peele becomes only student to be SGA president, VP

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This student body election is one for K-State's history books.

Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education, is the first student body vice president to be elected as student body president. At 6:20 p.m. Wednesday at Tubby's Sports Bar, applause and cheers broke out after the announcement "66 percent of the vote" came across the radio.

"It still really hasn't sunk in yet," Peele said in a telephone interview several hours after the announcement. "I don't think it's going to sink in for awhile; it's still pretty surreal."

Peele and student body vice president-elect Robert Swift received 65.7 percent of the votes cast in Tuesday and Wednesday's general election. During a KSDB-FM 91.9 interview prior to the results' announcement, Peele and Swift were asked what they would do if elected.

"I think the first call of order is to do some celebrating," Peele said, her comments followed with supporters' cheers. "Then, we'll start working on our platform issues right away. I think it's important to hit the ground running."

Swift, junior in political science, said he felt relieved after the announcement.

"As we mentioned time and time again, it's a really long run and a lot of work," he said. "I'm

Study reveals hike in choking for pleasure

By Kristin Hodges

The use of strangulation to get a high has led to many youth deaths, and that number has increased in the last decade, according to a recent study.

According to a Feb. 15 Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 82 "choking-game" deaths have occurred since 1995.

The deaths ranged in children and adolescents ages 6 to 19, but the mean age of the deaths was 13, with 71 percent being male.

The report defined the choking game as "a self-strangulation or strangulation by another person with the hands

Three young punk and rock-'n'-roll bands proved that Manhattan is not the place where only country music is popular Wednesday night in the K-State Student Union.

The bands performed to a crowd of satisfied students at the event, "Face AIDS," a benefit concert to raise awareness of the global AIDS epidemic, sponsored by K-State's Silver Key Sophomore Honors society and Union Programming Council.

"That's my kind of music. I like to go to concerts when I have time and when I can afford it," said Cody Davey, student at Manhattan Christian College. "I'm glad that this concert is for such a good cause as a promotion of AIDS awareness."

Melinda Wodke, junior in accounting and finance, was invited to the concert by her friends. She liked the music and the bands, she said.

"I go to UPC events regularly," she said. "The concert is cool, and its idea is also great."

R. L. Brooks from the band Flee the Seen said he gets tested for AIDS twice a year.

"Everything is fine with me, but I know it could happen to anybody," Brooks said. "While being in a rock band, we could benefit society like this: People go to the concert, listen to music, have a good time, but they also receive a meaningful message. I think it works out really well."

The officers of Silver Key sold tickets and AIDS awareness pins for the student-orientated Face Aids organization that helps raise money for AIDS research.

Donnie Hampton, sophomore in business management and a member of the Silver Key Sophomore Honors society, said AIDS has become an issue around the world.

"It is definitely a great show," he said. "We wanted to put a quality concert together with a good cause."

BURGLARS DONE IN BY DOUGHNUTS

ROSEBURG, Ore. — When two men in cowboy garb offered the sheriff's deputies doughnuts, and then the deputies investigated a burglary involving doughnuts and the prints of cowboy boots, it didn't take Sherlock Holmes to crack the case.

"The officers kind of put two and two together," Deputy District Attorney Dave Hopkins said Tuesday at the sentencing of Adam Hancock, 21, of Baker City on theft and burglary charges.

Sheriff's deputies reported they found Hancock and his cousin, Vincent Whitely, 19, in Roseburg on Jan. 11, and the pair offered the officers doughnuts, which they declined.

Shortly afterward, the officers investigated a burglary at a store from which cigarettes, candy, chewing gum and the telltale doughnuts were missing. And there were boot prints.

His attorney said Hancock had mental disabilities and was "easily led." Hancock told the judge he'd been drinking whiskey before the burglary and vowed to make restitution of $895. He got two 10-day jail terms with credit for time served.

Whitley pleaded guilty to the same charges last month and got the same sentence.

INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF PUSHES FOR EARPLUG FASHIONS AT DISCOS

LONDON (Reuters) — Earplugs might not be the most glamorous fashion item around, but a charity for the deaf has asked designers to pitch suggestions to make them hip enough for young clubbers at risk of long-term hearing damage.

The Royal National Institute for the Deaf (RNID) has launched a competition to find a look that will dispel the prevailing feeling that earplugs look too "medical", aesthetically unappealing and socially unacceptable.

The charity, which says 90 percent of young clubbers have experienced early signs of hearing damage, thinks the taboo might be surmountable.

"Because of Bluetooth headsets and iPods, people are getting more used to the idea of putting things in their ears that are fashionable," said a spokeswoman.

The RNID compares using earplugs to wearing a condom for sex, putting on sun cream or a bike helmet.

It says small earplugs available for between 10 and 15 pounds work much better than the more traditional, cheaper earplugs used by some to help them sleep, allowing clubbers to hear the detail of the music but reducing the volume.

But designer earplugs might cost more, it warns — depending on what the fashion and safety conscious clubber is willing to pay.

The winning designers will get internships with firms with the aim of putting their earplugs into production.

COUPLE MARRY AT HOME IMPROVEMENT STORE, WHERE THEY HAD FIRST DATE

KEARNEY, Neb. — The couple had their first date at the home improvement store, so they thought it would be a handy place to get hitched, too. Gaylan Whitwer and Francine Brickner-Whitwer of Gibbon were married Friday, standing in a kitchen display at the Menards store in Kearney.

They remodel homes as a hobby.

"This is where we spend on all our spare time, where we spend all our spare money," Gaylan Whitwer told the Kearney Hub. "It's just the right place for us."

They got engaged on Valentine's Day after dating for three years. It's the second marriage for both.

The nuptials were a secret from family and friends. The couple invited only the minister, their two attendants, a photographer and a videographer.

And all the shoppers who wandered by.

Pirates lose election; receive 34 percent of total presidential vote

By Salena Strate

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The pirate crew walked the plank last night after hearing the final results of the 2008 Student Governing Association's presidential election. After hearing that they lost, Tyrone "Red Beard" Schurr and Scott "First Mate" Carlson high fived each other and thanked their crew for supporting them.

"We did well, and we gave Lydia [Peele] a run for her money - for a lot of money," Schurr said at their watch party in Gumby's Pizza and Pub. "We talked about win or lose, we still want to make T-shirts. If we would have had T-shirts saying 'Vote pirate - think cannon,' we would of blown her out of the water."

One of the pirates' platform issues involved shooting off a barrel cannon after the football team scored a touchdown. Carlson, junior in electrical engineering, said he would be willing to work with Peele and Robert Swift to re-introduce the cannon.

Out of the 3,850 students who voted, the pirates received 1,321 votes, earning 34.3 percent of the vote. Between the primaries and the general elections, Schurr said they tripled their votes.

"I think there have been several things come out of this election," Schurr, senior in electrical engineering, said. "I still think the system works. When guys spend around $60 and make it this far and do this well, I think it will show to potentials in the future that if they really want to make waves in the political waters, it is well within grasp."

The general election, which was called friendly on both sides, raised several platform issues like Lafene Health Center and the parking garage.

Schurr said though they were defeated in the election, a future candidate can still carry on the pirate platform.

As for the pirate costumes and eye patch, Schurr said he will perhaps auction it off for charity or have it bronzed.

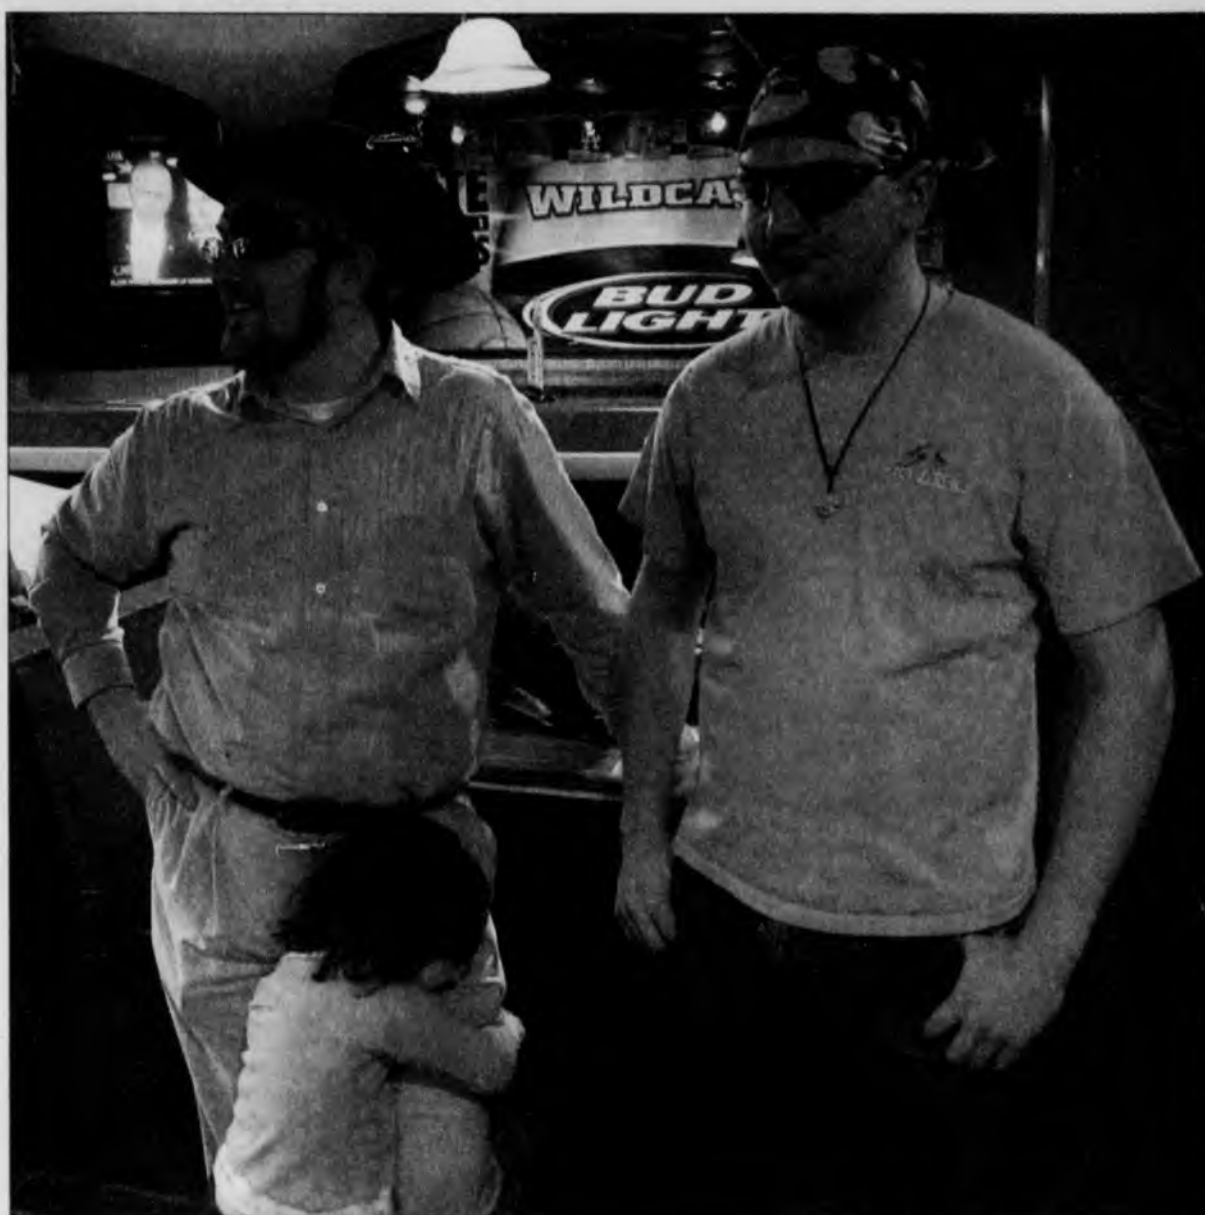

"Now that the elections are over, I will probably shave and stop wearing my pirate hat to campus," he said.

"First mate" Carlson said he will spend his newly found free time looking for booty.

One of the pirate's crewmen, Andrew Henness, worked wherever the pirates needed him.

"They were a different campaign, and they weren't interested in the typically political side," Henness, freshman in theater, said. "They were there for the lesser-known groups on campus. I'm actually glad they made it this far, putting up the showing that even if you are not a traditional candidate you can still put your name out there."

Student Senate to vote on 3 separate proposed increases in privilege fees

By Brandon Steinert

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Increases in privilege and activity fees account for three items on tonight's Student Senate agenda, which could mean a total increase of more than $60,000 by fiscal year 2011.

The bill will increase the recreational services operations budget privilege fee by 6.4 percent for fiscal year 2009 to $562,000, if the bill passes. The amount collected from privilege fees will increase to $617,000 by 2011, according to the agenda. The legislation is designed to help recreational services pay for increases in student pay scale and the inclusion of sports club supervision.

Student Senate also will vote on an increase in the recreational services repair and replacement reserve privilege fee. The bill will increase the amount taken from privilege fees to $10,000 for fiscal year 2009 and $10,500 for fiscal years 2010 and 2011. The funds can be used for major building repairs, replacements and maintenance.

K-State sports clubs also might see an increase in funds from the sports clubs activity fee. If passed, the bill will increase from $50,000 for school year 2008-09 to $54,000 for school year 2010-11. Student Senate will review the budget again before school year 2011-12. The primary purpose of this bill is to assist in travel costs for sports clubs, according to the agenda.

Six of the 15 new legislation items are amendments that alter minor phrases for clarity purposes.

Senators will review a resolution that will allocate funding from the Student-Centered Tuition Enhancement fund to areas of campus that get no other funding, according to the agenda. Some of the areas receiving more than $100,000 in fiscal year 2009 are the Education Opportunity fund, Diversity Programming, University Honors Program and the Volunteer Center. The total amount to be allocated, if the resolution passes, is $1,059,000, which was reduced from $2,066,164.57.

Student Senate also will review legislation dealing with grammatical changes made to the SGA Statutes as well as the reorganization of its chapters.

An increase in the Office of Student Activities and Services privilege fee is included on the list of new legislation to be introduced. According to the agenda, the bill will increase the amount taken from privilege fees by $16,000 between school years 2008-09 and 2010-11, if passed next week.

Another bill in new legislation will clarify items in the Student Publications Inc. privilege fee contract.

Fine Arts Student Group funding will increase by $5,000 from reserves if the bill passes next week.

Oil company should be held liable for spill

Take a cruise in Prince William Sound, Alaska, and you will see the effects. Dig two inches into the sand anywhere on the beach within 8,000 miles of coastline, and you will still find pools of oil. In my hometown, we know it simply as The Oil Spill – an event that occurred nearly two decades ago but its effects remain unresolved today.

Last Wednesday, a Supreme Court hearing began that, if successful, would overturn a $2.5 billion punitive damages award – an award considered by many to be the largest verdict ever against a single U.S. corporation. This will be the last hearing in Exxon Mobil Corp.'s 14-year effort to appeal the 1994 verdict by an Anchorage jury that awarded spill victims $5 billion in punitive damages. This amount eventually was cut in half by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in 2006.

JESSICA HENSELEY

Exxon appealed this decision to the Supreme Court, which agreed last year to hear the case.

According to records kept by the Exxon Mobil Corp., at 12:04 a.m. on March 24, 1989, the 986-foot oil tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground on Bligh Reef in Prince William Sound. Within six hours, the Exxon Valdez spilled about 10.9 million gallons of Prudhoe Bay crude oil into the sound. The oil would eventually affect more than 1,100 miles of coastline, making it the largest and most economically damaging oil spill to date in U.S. history.

Of the nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil spilled, an estimated 85 tons of oil have yet to be removed, according to a federal study released last year.

Exxon contends it should not be held liable for damages caused by the spill, arguing they are not responsible for the actions of the Exxon Valdez crew.

Many in Alaska hold their breath, waiting for a verdict that has been prolonged for 19 years and isn't expected until June. They can only hope Exxon will be held responsible for the environmental and economic devastation caused by the oil spill. The damage done to the fishing industry alone was enough to permanently cripple the local economies of many coastal towns.

"A whole lifestyle has gone," said one resident of Cordova, Alaska, in a USA Today article. "Life was great. I mean, you worked hard, but you were rewarded for it."

Today, residents of towns up and down the southern coast of Alaska still struggle to recover the lives they lived before that day in March almost 20 years ago.

Hopefully, the Supreme Court will hold the Exxon Mobil Corp. responsible for the damage it has done to so many. Maybe then, the victims in this story will be able to recover a little of what they have lost.

There is no undoing the damage and nothing will ever make up for the lives and livelihoods destroyed, but there is something to be said for a little closure.

TO THE POINT

Peele, Swift need to keep promises

We would like to congratulate Lydia Peele and Robert Swift for their victory in becoming the next student body president and vice president. These two should enjoy their victory, but the time for celebration will be short. Now that the elections and campaigns are over, it is time for them to take their message and put it to work.

Obviously, their message of "More for You" was well received by K-State students. But it is time for them to get specific with the message. It is time to explain what "more" means. Students want Lafene Health Center to be at its highest quality, they want to be able to find a parking space on campus, and they want to feel safe when walking on campus.

It is easy to recognize student concerns, but it will be more difficult to find and implement the best solution to do so. Peele has achieved results as the student body vice president, and she should be commended for her hard work. But by achieving so much, she has shown us what she, and possibly Swift, are capable of. Students will expect nothing less.

We are confident Peele and Swift will represent the voice and needs of the students they represent. We hope these two can fulfill the promises that they made, but we cannot make a true judgment until we see the results.

We are optimistic about next year, and we look forward to seeing K-State improve. The voters have given the president- and vice president-elects the chance – now it is time for candidates to give back.

I thought the circus came to town, but then I realized it was Sig Ep, so it all made sense.

I'm sorry, but I don't like The Beatles or Pink Floyd. Is there something wrong with me?

I've got a feeling in my gut that tells me I'm really better off not knowing the cause of the hellacious smell coming from the entomology department. Yeah, probably don't want to know that.

I like to wear diapers.

To the halftime entertainment coordinator: You suck. We want the Lil' Cats Slam Jam every game.

So, I'm watching the game, and I'm pretty sure the announcer just claimed that Michael Beasley is a product of global warming.

What's anything divided by infinity?

Going to Aggieville and trying to study for a test: Not such a good idea.

I'd rather watch a Richard Simmons marathon than the basketball game last night.

Extensive reliance on news media harmful

There was a radio program in 1938 that described the countryside frenzy of the gruesome aliens that had come to take over our land. Americans rallied with their shotguns and headed to their barns to protect the homeland, but the problem was that there were no aliens. The broadcast was simply a nationwide storytelling time. The aliens were from a novel by H.G. Wells called "War of the Worlds."

Presidential campaigns, just like the ever-present threat of alien invasion, bring out the best and the worst of the United States. On a national level, the country is forced to evaluate which issues are important, which issues are crucial to the security of our country, economically and militarily, foreign and domestic.

On an individual level, for the voters who care enough to follow the issues and candidates, presidential campaigns are a season of reflection. For every person who is absolutely certain on this critical decisions, there are dozens more that aren't so sure. These types of people are the ones who are in danger of being tricked to head to their barns.

The media cannot be trusted, and though we have gotten too clever to fall for fake aliens, we fall for other, more disguised media rhetoric all the time. Keep in mind that I am not affiliated with any party and am not campaigning for anyone here.

A UCLA study, considered "to be the first successful attempt at objectively quantifying bias in a range of media outlets" found that "almost all major media outlets lean to the left."

"I suspected that many media outlets would tilt to the left because surveys have shown that reporters tend to vote more Democrat than Republican," said Tim Groseclose, a UCLA political scientist and the study's lead author. "But I was surprised at just how pronounced the distinctions are."

In an Investors Business Daily article titled "The Times Vs. Citizen McCain," they point out the latest example of blatant media bias. "The [New York] Times recently ran a tabloid piece with no named witnesses or sources and without so much as a credit card receipt from a motel, suggesting that McCain was having a relationship with an attractive blond lobbyist."

The Media and Research Center released a study Feb. 28 that looked at network TV coverage of the war. They found that the amount of stories on the war was directly correlated to the amount of American deaths.

According to the center's findings, in January 2007, there were 250 news stories on the Iraq war when there were 135 American soldiers killed. In February 2008, there were 45 news stories on the war when 35 soldiers were killed. These statistics would make sense if the stories were about the soldiers themselves, but the study found that the few stories reported on the war were overwhelmingly negative.

There is hope for the people. In a 2003 Opinion Dynamics Poll, only 9 percent of U.S. citizens surveyed said they had a great deal of confidence in the news media, ranking lower than Congress, the Internal Revenue Service and the public school system.

Dear Media, when people trust the IRS more than they trust you, something needs to start changing. Wherever you get your news and your "facts" from, test them; make sure they hold up, and don't believe everything you hear.

Exhibit features K-State's history in research

Tony Crawford, university archivist and curator of manuscripts, flips through a 130-year-old agricultural geology book from an exhibit showcasing 100 years of K-State faculty publications on the fifth floor of Hale Library Tuesday afternoon.

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Historically, K-State's faculty has been recognized for many outstanding achievements that can be traced back to the university's first 100 years.

To recognize some of these achievements, Hale Library has organized an exhibit on more than 400 works published by K-State faculty during its first 100 years. Tony Crawford, K-State archivist, said the exhibit has been open since Feb. 14 and will remain open until May 30 on the fifth floor of Hale.

The exhibit honors the day K-State was founded.

"We chose these dates in honor of Founder's Day, which is Feb. 16," said Lori Goetsch, K-State's dean of libraries.

The cases display books chosen from 55 faculty members. Most of these books were published nationwide and were used as textbooks throughout the nation.

"These faculty members wrote books that were major publications in their various fields that were authoritative books in their field and throughout the country," he said. "Many of them are still historically very important."

The exhibit has a variety of books that feature the different colleges.

"It really shows the depth of research that has been done by K-State faculty from a range of science to poetry," Goetsch said.

The difficulty of choosing the books for the exhibit was searching for them, Crawford said. Some of the books had to be searched for in Hale's storage buildings. Many of the books, like cooking for human ecology, were used as textbooks throughout the country. One of the cooking texts on display is still used today, Crawford said.

There are five cases in the exhibit filled with works, artifacts and photographs to add visual and historical appeal. Artifacts are from the era of when the books were published. Photographs include views of the campus in 1962 and a picture of Bluemont Central College in 1859, which was in the location that is now Founders Hill apartments. The exhibit is open Mondays through Fridays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"It is important to know the history of K-State, because it notifies students that the faculty here has always been recognized and gives to the credibility of their education here at K-State," Crawford said.

Facebook translates to more youth

By Tierra Gordon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tagging photos, writing wall posts and updating statuses are the ways students can "Facebook" and keep their friends updated. However, it has not always been that easy for Facebook.com users who reside in foreign countries to communicate in this way.

To catch up with rival MySpace.com, which has national sites in more than 20 countries, Facebook has launched versions of its site in Spanish and German, and by the end of spring will release a French version to reach a more international audience.

According to a press release, Mark Zuckerberg, founder and CEO of Facebook, said members in non-English speaking countries make up 60 percent of the Facebook population.

Many K-State students think there will be an increase in this number with the recent language addition.

"I saw an increase just by looking at the friends that my Facebook friends have and saw more of them," Claudia Szecsi, freshman in education, said.

International students at K-State now find it easier to locate their friends by using this medium.

"It was hard at first, but now they can put their network on it," Szecsi said. "I have a friend in Chile, and she now has her network on there."

Arelys Rodriguez, junior in economics, said her cousin, who lives in Costa Rica, used the international application to find her on Facebook.

Professors in the modern language department said Facebook going international is a good idea, but they would not consider using it in classes.

"It's generally pretty good, but there are some errors," said Laura Kanost, visiting assistant professor of modern languages, who is also familiar with the Spanish version of Facebook.

"It wouldn't be a good model to use — maybe after a year since so many students are using it, Kanost said.

As Facebook releases new language options, the release states the company plans to rely on volunteers to help it translate the site into non-English languages, borrowing a strategy popularized by Wikipedia.

Teamwork vital to NCAA run

March is the best time to be a sports fan in the United States.

The NBA is coming down the home stretch with teams vying for play-off position. The MLB is in the middle of spring training with every team dreaming of that possible world championship in the fall. Hundreds of college football players are showing their prospects at the NFL Combine and praying their names get called April 29 for the draft.

BRAD DORNES

College basketball, however, is what makes March special. The NCAA tournament brings the top 65 teams together with only one surviving to become the national champion.

Along the way, bubbles are burst, dreams are broken and an underdog becomes a Cinderella. As of right now, it looks like K-State will go into the tournament as a low seed and will need to be fitted for its glass slipper.

Before the slipper can fit, the team must change its offensive strategy. Up to this point, K-State has asked freshman forward Michael Beasley to carry the offensive load by himself. Depending on the night, freshman forward Bill Walker could have a big game, but lately, he has been inconsistent. This offensive philosophy worked at the beginning of the season, but months have passed, and opponents have figured out what K-State is trying to do.

Come tournament time, the one-man show that has been K-State's offense will need to be adapted into a more team-oriented offense. The team's mindset has been to force-feed Beasley the ball and get out of his way. Now, he is drawing double- and even triple-teams and is still forced to make a highly contested shot.

Once Beasley catches the basketball, the other Wildcats seem almost mesmerized as they watch him go to work. Then if Beasley gets into foul trouble, like in last week's KU game, the rest of the team seems lost and does not know what to do without him. It is during this time that K-State's offense becomes stale.

The rest of the team needs to become more involved in the offense. They do not need to become prolific scorers — just more consistent. Beasley and Walker hold the key to allowing their teammates to become a bigger part of the offense. By passing out of the double and triple teams and finding their open teammates, it will allow more players to become involved, and the offense will flow more smoothly.

This team has the capabilities to go far in the NCAA tournament, and because of the dynamic duo of Beasley and Walker, K-State is definitely a team to be feared. The Wildcats need to play more as a team instead of as a group of individuals if they want to make a serious postseason run.

Brad Dornes is a senior in social science. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

WOMEN | Wildcats stand atop Big 12

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Shalin Spani and junior forward Marlies Gipson signify their position at the top of the Big 12 Conference standings following their 61-50 victory over Kansas Wednesday night. K-State clinched at least a share of the regular-season title.

team wasn't playing at its best on offense.

"We weren't probably connecting on all cylinders on the offensive end as a team, but that's where [junior guard Shalee] Lehning felt like she was about 80 percent of the offense," Patterson said. "When we needed a big play, she was the big playmaker and then, down the stretch, Dietz stepped up and made a big three."

When Dietz launched a 9-0 run with a three-point basket, allowing K-State to ease its way to the win, Dietz said she was initially looking for sophomore guard Kari Kincaid to take a shot, but Kincaid found the senior for the shot.

"Me and my teammates, we just read each other so well," Dietz said. "I just looked for Kari, and I thought she was going to take a three, and then she just dribbled up and looked for me in the corner. It was a great pass and I ended up hitting it."

Lehning led the Wildcats in scoring with 29 points, a new career-high, and recorded a double-double by adding 17 rebounds. It was the second time in the past three games Lehning, who scores 10.5 points per game, scored more than 20 points.

"The opportunities have arose for me to score more, we haven't changed anything," Lehning said. "My mentality is just to contribute to my team whatever we need that night. Tonight, it was for me to do more offensively, other nights it's for me to do other things."

Dietz scored 16 points to aid the K-State win and junior forward Marlies Gipson added ten points. KU was led by sophomore guard Danielle McCray's 17 points while Jacobs added 14.

To win the Big 12 regular season title was a turnaround from the Wildcats' 4-12 Big 12 record from the 2006-07 season. One year ago, K-State struggled to get into the NIT. Now, the Wildcats are looking to be a top-four seeded team in the NCAA tournament. They are the first team in Big 12 history to finish in last place one year and win the conference the next. Lehning said the success and reward is something K-State doesn't take for granted.

"We've been on the other end, and we know what it's like to lose, but now when we have success and we have worked for everything we have gotten," she said. "That's something that separates us from others."

Men's golf takes 5th place at Braveheart Classic

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Mitchell Gregson finished in sixth place and led the Wildcats to a fifth-place finish in the Braveheart Classic on Tuesday.

Gregson shot an eight-over par 224, which was his third top-10 finish of the season.

Including the fall schedule, it was the Wildcats' fifth top-5 finish this year. They have finished in the top-10 in all seven contests.

K-State finished with a score of 54-over par 918, which left them 18 strokes behind tournament champion Cal Poly. Others finishing ahead of the Wildcats were Texas Christian, who got a 48-over par 912; University of California at Santa Barbara, who shot a 46-over par 910 and tournament host University of California at Riverside who finished with a 44-over par 908.

The Wildcats were in fourth place at the end of Monday, and nine-over par 297 was the second-lowest team score in the second round, but a 19-over par after the final 18 holes hurt them down the stretch.

"There were a lot of missed opportunities today and some poor finishes at the end," said coach Tim Norris. "I know the guys were trying to make something happen, but it just doesn't work that way, especially on a really good golf course. You just have to keep plugging away."

Sophomore Joe Ida finished with a score of 14-over par 230, which left him tied for 17th. It was his fifth top-20 finish this season. Senior Kyle Yonke, junior Robert Streb and freshman Daniel Wood, the only Wildcat competing as an individual, all finished tied for 27th with a score of 17-over par 233. Freshman Kyle Smell's score of 22-over par left him tied for 57th.

Norris said he was proud of his team's effort and said it was a good way to start the spring schedule.

"It was great that we had a chance to win," he said. "You can't ask for a whole lot more than that in the first tournament of the spring."

He said he thinks that the Wildcats will be able to build on their performance.

"I'm really optimistic about getting in position and taking confidence from this, even though it didn't turn out the way we would have liked," he said. "There were good conditions and some good, low scores today, but you had to earn it, and we weren't quite up to the task. Hopefully, we can get things corrected and squared away before we leave for Fresno."

The Wildcats will be back in action next week when they return to California for the Fresno Lexus Classic. The tournament, with Fresno State as host, will be at Fort Washington Country Club. Play will begin March 10 and conclude on the next day.

Tennis team loses tight match at KU, ending 3-year win streak

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has won the past three meets against Kansas and has won two of the last three Big 12 Conference openers, but none of that mattered Wednesday when Kansas emerged victorious, 4-3.

K-State clinched the doubles point with the top two doubles teams winning their matches. Junior Katerina Kudlackova and senior Olga Klimova won the No. 1 doubles match, 8-3, over Kansas' senior Elizaveta Avdeeva and Edina Horvath.

At the No. 2 doubles spot, senior Viviana Yrureta and freshman Antea Huljev beat KU's senior Lauren Hommell and sophomore Kunigunda Dorn. The only doubles victory for the Jayhawks came at the No. 3 doubles spot; junior Yuliana Svistun and freshman Magdalena Tokarczyk beat the K-State freshman duo of Vanessa Cottin and Pauline Guemas, 8-3.

In singles play, KU made up ground by winning four of the six singles matches. The only K-State players who won were Yrureta, who won at No. 1 singles spot over Tokarczyk, 2-6, 7-5, 6-4. Huljev also triumphed at the four position, winning 6-4, 6-3 over Dorn. The only other singles match that went the full three matches was Klimova at No. 6 singles, who lost 7-5, 4-6, 2-6 to Hommell.

K-State will face another nonconference opponent Saturday when New Mexico visits Manhattan at 11 a.m.

The game will either be played at Ahearn Field House or at the Washburn Tennis Facility at the Peters Recreation Complex.

The game will be outdoors at the rec if the temperature is warmer than 50 degrees.

Women's basketball team places 8 on academic list

The women's basketball team was the only Big 12 Conference team to place eight of its athletes on the Academic All-Big 12 team.

The academic team included 27 members on the first team and 10 on the second team. The first team members have a 3.2 or better GPA, and the second team have a 3.0 to 3.19 GPA. To qualify, the athletes must have a 3.0 GPA or higher either overall or during the previous two semesters. They must also compete in 60 percent of the games.

The first-team members of seniors Carolyn McCullough and Shana Wheeler, juniors Marlies Gipson, Shalee Lehning and Danielle Zanotti and sophomores Kari Kincaid and Ashley Sweat. Senior Kimberly Dietz made the second team.

McCullough was also one of two athletes on the All-Big 12 team who maintained a 4.0 GPA.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Enjoyable ideas for spring break

Got any ideas for Spring Break?

Go on a cruise. All my architect friends have one planned with a full itinerary and all. I'd join them, but I don't want to be a 19th wheel.

ADAM REICHENBERGER

Take a road trip somewhere. I stress that you must experience a trip by yourself at some point in your college career. The experience is not one to be taken lightly. You will learn an awful lot about who you are and what you're capable of doing when you have nothing familiar on which to lean. There are extremely cheap hostels all across this country; you've just got to find them.

If you can't handle being alone, take a few friends along. I'm not kidding about these hostels — they're very affordable. That, along with splitting gas four or five ways, can make it a pretty cheap trip. Throw a dart at a map of the U.S. and just go there. Bring a camera, drink some beer, meet some people — I promise you'll have a blast.

Now if you're completely broke like myself, you might just be stuck in this town. In that case, you'll just have to make the most of what you got.

Go to the zoo. I don't know why I said that, but I hear we have one, and that's got to occupy at least 20 minutes of your week. I intend to adopt one of their tortoises. I'm going to name him Henry. And if Henry's setup is anything like the tortoise exhibits I've seen in the past, you better believe I'm going to jump over that tiny rail and get a picture of myself sitting on him. I'll hang it next to the pictures of my dogs. So in a row you'll see Paul, Lucy, and me and Henry.

Speaking of Paul and Lucy, they're my dogs. I'm spending my spring break with them. My sister is bringing them up from Topeka that first weekend. It might not sound entertaining to you. You might be thinking, "Adam, you're going to spend your spring break playing with your dogs? Dumb." Well, that my friend, is because you don't know my dogs.

Paul is two years old, and he's dumb. My eldest sister thinks he's autistic. I don't doubt it. He enjoys running into walls and people and falling down and not seeing, smelling or hearing anything. Nicest dog in the world.

Lucy is a year younger than Paul and more of a normal dog. Her interests include sleeping in, eating koozies and humping Paul. Cutest dog in the world.

The three of us will be spending our week running around the park, whooping at girls. We'll pass some girl, and she'll be drawn in by Lucy's big brown eyes, saying, "Aww, she's so cute," and when Paul innocently runs into her shins and falls over, she'll continue, "Aww, and this one's dumb. What's your name?"

My reply: "Adam. Have you ever ridden a tortoise?"

Game over.

Experts tell how to live healthier, happier

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Almost everyone can relate to one another in the sense that healthy living is, in general, an important aspect of life.

Kara Bartosch, sophomore in kinesiology, said the following tips are a few ways students can live healthier.

START EATING A BALANCED DIET: Super diets do not work. Also, eating nothing at all is not healthy either. Instead, try eating a balanced meal. Eating the right amount of vegetables and fruits daily should try to be incorporated in a diet. Eating in moderation is also key to whatever you might want to eat, especially with junk foods.

You can't say that if you work out, you can eat whatever you want, or if you eat healthy, you don't need to exercise; both go hand-in-hand.

Another important aspect of living healthy is making sure you consume enough calcium, Bartosch said.

"On average, a person should drink about four glasses [of milk] a day," she said. "You determine now whether you will have osteoporosis in the future."

THIRTY MINUTES A DAY OF CARDIOVASCULAR EXERCISE:

Cardio exercises can involve working on an elliptical machine or running. If you go to the recreation center, many machines have modes for cardio workouts. By incorporating cardio exercises daily, a person will not only help themselves lose weight but reduce stress, reduce the risk of heart disease, increase confidence and increase energy, she said.

Richard Rosenkranz, research associate at the Community Health Institute, said working on incorporating these healthy habits can help to increase a healthier lifestyle.

SLEEP: Getting adequate hours and quality sleep is important for a healthier lifestyle, Rosenkranz said. Sleeping in a dark, quiet room without noise and light coming in is ideal to get better sleep. Not having enough sleep affects what you do during your waking hours. Lack of sleep leads to health problems, depression and anxiety. Potentially, a person could develop hormonal problems as well. For students, they should try to get on a routine to obtain more hours of sleep, he said.

BREAKFAST: "Eating a healthy breakfast helps to live better because eating sets yourself up for a good day," Rosenkranz said.

Eat whole grains, fruit and lean proteins for breakfast. Some oatmeal and fruit would be a nutritious breakfast. Don't just have a dry piece of toast — the body will crash later during the day, because it does not have the nutrients it needs to provide a lasting energy, he said.

ACTIVE TRANSPORT TO SCHOOL OR WORK: Walking or biking to class or work is healthy for individuals because you have some form of working out during the day. Walking or biking to class also helps to meet physical guidelines for the day, so you might not have to go to the rec later. It is also healthy on the pocket book.

STOP SMOKING: There is no shortage of evidence of reasons to stop smoking, he said. Short-term smoking is not going to heavily affect the body, but it will make teeth yellow and make your breath smell. It is more a long-term issue that can harm your body and health. If you are not smoking, then you will notice other areas that will need improvements and strive to live healthier. For those who still smoke, they are less likely to care about what they are doing as far as healthy habits, Rosenkranz said.

ORAL HYGIENE: Oral hygiene is linked to cardiovascular problems. Brushing and flossing daily is very important, Rosenkranz said. Flossing routinely could help reduce the risk of heart problems later in life.

STRESSMANAGEMENT: Learning time-management skills early will help to manage stress. There always will be stress, but it gets worse with procrastination, Rosenkranz said. Stress causes unhealthy habits because people run out of time to take care of their bodies and start consuming caffeine. Organization and planning homework, projects and appointments can help reduce the amount of stress. Taking the time for physical activities also helps, because it allows individuals to relax and provides energy for them to work on tasks that need to be finished.

"The challenge for college students is the benefits are delayed," Rosenkranz said. "When you don't do it, the negative consequences come when you are older, and it can cause health issues. Any investments you put with your body will come later in life."

Laura Parente, junior in dietetics, also said writing in journals can help reduce stress. It can release tension in everyday situations. It is a healthy way to handle feelings, she said.

CREATING "YOU" TIME: Parente said making time for yourself can help to clear your mind and stay positive. Positivity is important for health because if others around you are positive, you most likely will have a positive outlook on situations.

DRINK WATER: It is important to stay hydrated, Parente said, and avoiding sodas is important to becoming healthier. Sometimes, when people feel hungry, they are possibly thirsty, therefore drinking water when you are craving something could determine if it is genuinely hunger or thirst.

VITAMINS: Consuming vitamins is important, especially by eating vitamin-rich foods, but if it is difficult for a person to eat certain foods, taking supplements can help. However a person obtains vitamins does not matter, but taking vitamins is vital because they help the body become stronger in many ways.

"10,000 B.C." (PG-13)

In a remote mountain tribe, the young hunter, D'Leh, has found his heart's passion — the beautiful Evolet. When a band of mysterious warlords raid his village and kidnap Evolet, D'Leh is forced to lead a small group of hunters to pursue the warlords to the end of the world to save her.

"The Bank Job" (R)

A car dealer with a dodgy past and new family, Terry has always avoided major-league scams. But when Martine, a beautiful model from his old neighborhood, offers him a lead on a foolproof bank hit on London's Baker Street, Terry recognizes the opportunity of a lifetime. Martine targets a roomful of safe deposit boxes worth millions in cash and jewelry.

"College Road Trip" (G)

Melanie is eagerly looking forward to taking her first big step toward independence when she plans a girls-only road trip to check out prospective universities. However, when her imposing police-chief dad insists on escorting her instead, she soon finds her dream trip turning into a nightmare full of misfortune and turmoil. Dad wants to assure total security and safety for his precious daughter, while Melanie has a 17-year-old's need to become a grown woman and have her own sense of independence.

"Married Life: (PG-13)

Harry decides he must kill his wife Pat because he loves her too much to let her suffer when he leaves her. Harry and his much-younger girlfriend, Kay, are head over heels in love, but his best friend Richard wants to win Kay for himself. As Harry implements his awkward plans for murdering his wife, the other characters are occupied with their own deceptions. Like Harry, they are overwhelmed by their passions, but still struggle to avoid hurting others.

"Snow Angels" (R)

A couple that have separated are each attempting to pick up the threads of a future when they are dealt a further blow that leads to a dark conclusion. And a somewhat-nerdy young man in the throes of discovering a first romance must also deal with the separation and consequent strife of his parents' failed relationship.

Disabled students share own stories

By Lacy Skinner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just because someone has a disability doesn't mean he or she is incapable of being successful, said a renowned author who speaks about living with autism.

Dr. Temple Grandin emphasized the importance of education in the life of a disabled person at K-State for All, the second-annual Disability Awareness Week exhibition, Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

"I was lucky to get a good, early education," Grandin said.

Even though she said she was a troublemaker in her years in school, Grandin expressed appreciation to the teachers who helped her through school and ultimately helped her become an animal scientist.

Grandin explained that individuals with autism, Asperger's and dyslexia all possess both strengths and weaknesses.

Students with these disabilities should identify their strengths and "develop that area of strength" by taking relevant classes during their freshman year of college, she said.

Curious individuals visited informational booths about various disabilities during the event. They also were treated to a performance by the Silent Singers from Junction City.

A panel of K-State students shared with the audience their experiences living with a disability immediately following Grandin's speech.

Each student agreed that the hardest part about having a disability is people generalizing their disabilities into one category.

Besides having disabilities, they lead pretty normal lives, the panelists said.

One panelist shared her "normal" hobbies like scrapbooking and playing softball to show the audience she is happy with her life and can enjoy it like other students.

Jaclyn Anderson, assistant director of Disability Support Services, helped establish the disability awareness week last year. She explained that when she arrived at K-State, the student body was not fully aware or educated about the challenges and lives of those with disabilities and decided to create a week full of events ad-

Shanon Robertson, freshman in pre-pharmacy, said the event was very interesting, and she liked how the panel of students was "content with themselves."

Others appreciated the opportunity to learn about students' disabilities.

"It was a really good experience to make others aware of disabilities," said Alex Wilson, senior in psychology and member of Union Programming Council.

PRESIDENT | Pair to take office in April

just kind of enjoying the moment right now. A goal that we set out for in November finally just happened."

Peele and Swift officially are sworn into office on April 3. Swift said he and Peele are still looking for new ideas to add to their three platform issues — more peace of mind, more for the future and more for your money.

It has been more than 10 years since a K-State student body vice president ran for president. In spring 1997, then-vice president Aaron Otto ran for president and lost.

Peele and Swift received 2,529 votes. While a total of 4,041 voters participated in Tuesday and Wednesday's general elections, 3,850 votes were cast for student body president and vice president.

Michael Burns and Grant Groene, who served as K-State student body president and vice president in 2005-06, and Lucas Maddy, who served as student body president in 2006-07, showed their support Wednesday night. Lydia's mother, Cathy Peele, and her younger sister, Melanie, also supported her at Tubby's.

"I am so proud of her," Melanie, sophomore in secondary education, said. "She has worked so hard. I'm so excited to see what the year holds for her. She will have such a positive impact on people."

Family members and friends filled Tubby's dressed in their red "More for You" T-shirts.

"This is ridiculous," said Mary Fox, senior in political science, at 5:45 p.m. "I love it. This is busier than a Saturday night."

Fox first met Peele in 2004 when the two served as Student Governing Association interns as freshmen. Fox said Peele is her best friend, and she plans to serve on her SGA executive cabinet next year.

"Lydia was definitely No. 1 for the position," Fox said. "Students know that it's a really important position. Robert's a class act, too, and they're going to improve what they've already started and add to it."

STRANGULATION | Depictions in films could have led to increase

or a noose to achieve a brief euphoric state caused by cerebral hypoxia."

Debra Bolton, K-State extension agent with the Kansas Family Partnership, said the strangulation behavior used to get a high is a symptom of disengaged youth, or youth who don't feel like they have an important job to do in supporting their families or communicating effectively with them.

Bolton said she thought youth learn about the behavior from the media and from word of mouth. She mentioned a specific movie, "Life as a House," where there is a scene of a youth shown huffing and hanging himself to get a high.

"If a young person is watching those kinds of things, they're witnessing all kinds of violence," she said.

Bolton said the behavior is typical for the stages when youth reach puberty and more so after that time.

She said she has heard of these incidents in Kansas but not of any in the last 12 months, though she said that does not mean that any have not occurred.

According to the CDC Web site, someone can die from strangulation, which in these cases is not intended for suicide, "within three minutes of continued strangulation" when the basic functions and the central nervous system fail.

The site reports other consequences, including death of brain cells, coma, seizures and hemorrhages of the eye.

The CDC report noted the study was the "first attempt to assess the national incidence of deaths among youths resulting from the choking game." Though this behavior might have been practiced years before, "the use of a ligature while playing appears to be a new practice that can be fatal."

The report showed that the deaths have increased since 1995, where from that year until 2004, about three deaths were recorded. However, in 2005 there were 22, 35 in 2006 and nine in 2007.

According to the MMWR report, there is no public health dataset that tracks deaths because of accidental strangulation used to get a high. The 82-death number found from the CDC study was calculated from media reports since the 1970s.

Elaine Johannes, K-State extension youth development specialist, said research and behavior tracking is done through a surveillance system, which has not yet been created for intentional strangulation.

She said the surveillance would likely have to be created from an effort by the federal government to have doctors screen for the behavior, but that is difficult.

"It is a complex issue that is not easily solved," she said.

When there are cases of children strangling themselves or having friends do it, it can be difficult to know if the child is doing it to get a high or if it is a suicide attempt, Johannes said.

Johannes said she does not think the behavior is as prevalent as other risky behaviors in youth, though she said that could change with more attention by the media. She said it is dangerous to refer to the behavior as a "game," because the behavior could increase.

"I am not a big fan of taking bizarre behavior and sensationalizing that," she said. "As adults, we need to be thoughtful in our information around kids."

Johannes said the more the behavior is labeled as a game, the more it is attractive to youth who engage in risky behavior. She used examples of the game "chicken" and said children cannot always distinguish a game from harmful behavior.

Johannes said the behavior is rare, and she thinks, if the cases would increase, it would not become a trend like bingeing. She said self choking is related to other risky behaviors, and families should be aware of these.

Bolton said an important part of prevention is to include the whole family in the prevention practice to promote health and behavior.

"Health is physical, mental and emotional well-being," she said. "All of those things promote a youth who is doing well in school and actively engaged in activities with peers."

Police to conduct saturation patrol throughout Saturday

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department will work with the Kansas Highway Patrol this weekend in an attempt to control drunken driving.

On Saturday, the RCPD will conduct a DUI saturation point, according to an RCPD press release. Officers on patrol will be looking for traffic violations and signs of impaired driving.

Lt. Steve Boyda RCPD said the patrol wasn't specifically because of the "Fake Patrick's Day" celebration in Aggieville.

"[Saturday night] was chosen because of the high number of people that were out drinking," Boyda said. "It is a weekend night and we wanted to have it in conjunction with a lot of drunks being on the roadway."

According to the press release, motorists who show signs of impaired driving will be pulled over and "appropriate enforcement action will be taken."

Boyda said saturation patrols are different from DUI checkpoints in several ways.

"A [DUI] checkpoint is where everyone is stopped," Boyda said. "The road is shut down and every car on the road is stopped."

On a saturation patrol, Boyda said, officers drive around "aimlessly" looking for signs of impaired drivers.

"There is a list of 20 traffic violations, and if you have any number of them, in concert with each other, the percentage chances of intoxication goes up," Boyda said.

Those signs include, but are not limited to, failure to stay in a single lane of traffic, staying left of center, making wide radius turns, driving slower than the posted speed limit or driving without headlights on, Boyda said.

The RCPD will not be the only law enforcement agency guarding the streets of town; as the Kansas Highway Patrol also will have several cars on patrol.

Boyda said the highway patrol will be covering both Geary and Riley counties, but their cars are allowed to come into town if they wish.

"They will stick to the main roads," Boyda said. "You know, Fort Riley Boulevard, Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Kimball Avenue, but there is nothing to say they can't come in and around Aggieville."

Saturday's patrol will be the first in a series of five that will be conducted this year, according to the press release. The funding for the saturation patrol is provided by the Kansas Department of Transportation's Highway Safety Project.

Check Monday's Collegian for more Fake Patrick's Day celebration coverage, photos and quotes.

Senate, House pass coal plant legislation

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Senate passed a revised energy bill that would expand the range of coal-burning power plants in southwest Kansas, but the governor might keep that from happening.

The Senate passed a bill that affects plants in Finney County Thursday with a 31-7 vote after the House passed the bill with a 75-47 vote Wednesday. However, the House's vote was nine votes short of the total needed to override a possible veto by the governor.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' press secretary released a statement Wednesday an hour after the House's decision. It stated that the governor does not support specific language of the bill that restricts the Kansas Department of Health and Environment Secretary's power to set new air-pollution standards and limits the authority to deny air-quality permits for proposed power plants.

"Due to the Legislature's decision to keep that language in this bill, it's really not a question of if she'll veto, but when," Sebelius' press secretary wrote in a released statement.

Seth Bundy, spokesman for the governor, said nothing changed from Wednesday to Thursday, so the governor's statement remains the same.

In October 2007, KDHE secretary Roderick Bremby denied permits that would allow the Sunflower Electric Power Corporation to build two proposed 700-megawatt coal-burning power plants because of the plants' annual amounts of emissions and effect on the environment.

After the denial, three senators and three representatives formed a conference committee and created a compromise bill that included green items to persuade legislators to look past the plants' carbon dioxide emissions. However, the language regarding the KDHE secretary's authority still does not meet the approval of the governor.

Sen. Mark Taddiken, R-Clifton, voted for the bill that passed Thursday. With the anticipated veto from Sebelius, Taddiken said he will be disappointed.

"At the point we're in now, this bill has been through conference committee," he said. "It's not amendable. Since we have passed this version, it's on its way to the governor's desk. If the governor vetoes it, and it is not overridden, the issue would have to start over in a different bill."

Taddiken is a strong supporter of alternative energy and said he is the chair of Kansas Department of Agriculture's 25 by '25 initiative, which has a goal of having 25 percent of the nation's total energy needs provided by renewable energy by 2025.

Earmarks, also known as pork, fund several worthy projects like K-State research, but many people and legislators want to eliminate them completely.

Earmarks fund several campus research projects

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Congressional earmarks have a bad reputation in much of the United States. For years, members of Congress have tried to cut the number of earmarks, also known as pork, even going so far as to eliminate them completely.

However, earmarks, which are added to unrelated bills to fund research and construction projects throughout the U.S., have specific purposes — some good and some bad, said Rep. Nancy Boyda, D-Kan.

On the bad side, earmarks have funded questionable projects like a bridge in Alaska that connected an island of less than 50 people to the mainland. That project cost $223 million dollars.

On the good side, universities like K-State receive several millions of dollars each year from earmarks, including funds for stem-cell and biosecurity research, said Sue Peterson, director of government relations at K-State.

Peterson said she has not determined the final amount K-State received from earmarks during the last fiscal year, but she estimated the funding was between $14 and $15 million.

The earmarks will fund projects at the Midwest Institute for Comparative Stem Cell Biology, Great Plains Sorghum Improvement and Utilization Center, and the Biosecurity Research Institute, among other projects.

Peterson, who lobbies Congress for K-State funds, said the university stays in regular contact with all Kansas representatives and senators.

"We work with all six members," Peterson said. "I would say we have good projects and great relationships with them."

Boyda said many of the earmark projects would falter if they did not receive funding from earmarks. It is possible that several of these projects would not receive funding from other areas like separate government grants and private contributions.

"Without this funding, some of these programs could be interrupted," she said. "They could have to stop — it would be a mess."

The Biosecurity Research Institute has received about $16 million from earmarks for construction, equipment and other costs, said Scott Rusk, director of the BRI.

Rusk said this funding has allowed the BRI to continually move forward with construction and re-

Self-expression, anger and willingness to discuss controversial issues such as homosexuality has won activist/poet, Chrystos, a legion of admirers.

Chrystos shared her poetry to a packed crowd of K-State students and faculty as one of the keynote speakers for the 17th Annual K-State Cultural Studies Conference Thursday night in the Little Theater.

Chrystos, who is a lesbian and American Indian shared advice to the crowd in an open manner.

"If you learn as a writer to write from your own spirit, you'll never have writers' block," Chrystos said.

Chrystos read many of her poems including, "They're always telling me I'm too angry" — a response to the critics who viewed her work as being too angry. In the poem, Chrystos talked about the many different frustrations that exist in society, including genocide, land theft and the need for more people who aren't afraid of anger.

"If you aren't as angry as me, we probably shouldn't talk to each other because I'm furious by your fear of

Koch donates $400,000 to promote K-State ethnic minority enrollment

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent donation of $400,000 will help promote an increase in the enrollment of ethnic minority students at K-State.

The Fred C. and Mary R. Koch Foundation and Koch Industries Inc. donated the money to the K-State office of diversity. The money is being used by K-State to help fund Project IMPACT, said Dawne Martin, assistant to the dean for diversity.

"We want to help students from diverse backgrounds learn about the opportunities available to them if they pursue a college education," said Susan Addington, community relations manager for the Fred C. and Mary R. Koch Foundation.

Project IMPACT is a three-part program. The first part involves recruiting high school students in the College for a Day Program, during which multicultural high school juniors and seniors can spend a day on K-State's campus. This is held about seven times a year.

"We're just trying to create a positive experience for them on campus," Martin said. "Students exposed to students from other cultures are more accepting."

Dedication to recruitment of multicultural students goes further than just focusing on recruiting students from high schools in Kansas.

K-State also recruits by alumni mobilization, in which alumni recruit multicultural students from their current state to come to K-State, Martin said.

The new funding will also go toward recruiting students during HALO's "Encuentro" event, which takes place in the fall and focuses on bringing a greater Latino population to the university.

Koch's donations will also go to scholarships through the College of Business Administration.

Students who are majoring in business or studying accounting and finance can apply for a scholarship of $2,000. Six of these are awarded throughout the year.

"With this gift, we are supporting a multi-year program that can make a positive difference in these students' lives," Addington said.

A major focus in the College of Business Administration is its mentoring program, which the donations will also help fund. Martin said the college strongly promotes the program, especially to students of different backgrounds who might have more difficulty adjusting.

Project IMPACT assigns four multicultural students as mentors to 10 students each; these mentors guide the new students in their transition from high school to college, Martin said.

"More and more companies are looking at the diversity of universities to recruit," Martin said.

Businesses are looking to diversify their workforce because their customer bases are becoming more diversified, she said.

"Koch companies are committed to workplace diversity," said Theresa Johnson, director of communication at Koch Industries Inc. "Many of our employees are alumni of colleges and universities in Kansas. We hope this partnership with K-State will help prepare students of all backgrounds for successful careers."

Hypocrites

U.S. actions involving gun trade differ from rhetoric against China, Venezuela

Christine Klein | COLLEGIAN

According to the BBC, the U.S. government recently released a report criticizing China's defense spending.

Responding to the projected $59 billion budget, the report said "the real Chinese defense budget for 2007 was at least double the stated amount." International concern has continued to increase, as this is the 20th consecutive year that China has increased its defense budget, and statements that China will act militarily to prevent Taiwanese independence further fuel the global community's worries.

The Associated Press reported that Venezuelan president Hugo Chavez ordered nearly 9,000 troops – 10 battalions – to the border with Columbia. According to the Arms Control Association, in 2005 the United States condemned the sale of attack and transport crafts and AK-47's by Russia and flight attack aircraft by Spain to Venezuela. Concerns were voiced by then-Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld.

In testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 15, 2007, Gen. Bantz Craddock, commander of U.S. Southern Command noted with alarm that "Venezuela's military included up to 80,000 service members." He also questioned the fate of excess new weapons and displaced weapons, primarily whether or not those weapons would end up in the hands of Colombian rebels, who are the source of the current antagonism.

Those of us living in the United States shouldn't be surprised by the actions taken by both China and Venezuela; in fact, our only shock should come at the rank hypocrisy of our rhetoric concerning each situation.

According to the Office of Management and Budget, the 2007 budget presented by the president included $493.7 billion for the Department of Defense, including $50 billion in bridge funding to support the military's Global War on Terror efforts in Afghanistan and Iraq.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated the cost of conducting the actual armed conflict being waged by a major global power – the war in Iraq – as costing between $9 billion and $13 billion each month. Even high estimates of China's defense spending – between $97 billion and $139 billion – don't compare with the actual U.S. allocations for defense.

And as we look down our noses at Russia, Spain and Brazil for arming Venezuela, according to the Federation of American Scientists, the estimated United States market share for total arms exports from 1989 to 1996 is 45.4 percent, totaling about $300 billion.

The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 serves as the law of the land concerning U.S. foreign arms sales. It distinguishes between two types of sales – direct commercial sales from U.S. arms manufacturers directly to foreign countries; and foreign military sales, the sale of arms by the U.S. government itself.

Of course we are selective as to which countries we sell these arms, limiting our business to long-standing allies (like Israel, embroiled in armed conflict with increasingly hostile neighbors, most notably Palestine) or governments fighting drug trafficking (e.g., Columbia, as mentioned earlier).

Perhaps the most problematic of our policies concerns surplus. The Department of Defense has solved this by dispensing most of our surplus arms for free or at deep reduction through the excess defense articles program.

What we need to realize is this: The United States is not the only country in the world willing to protect its sovereignty. And that "patriotism" is not a uniquely American concept. While we believe that whatever actions our government takes to protect itself are glorious and moral, we cannot ignore the fact that there are other perceptions of our actions in the world.

Antagonism, nationalism and "the enemy" are in the eye of the beholder. Unlike most U.S. citizens, the popular media interpretation of U.S. actions is rarely unquestionably accepted by the rest of the global community.

If we are to believe the words of our government – that the United States must continue to lead the international community – then it behooves us as a nation to align our actions with our words. Because the rest of the world is doing as we do.

Sports columnist lacks personal knowledge of fans

Apparently Jason Whitlock, a sports columnist for the Kansas City Star, thinks he knows a thing or two about the K-State basketball team and its fans.

In a column written about the Wildcats on Feb. 26 entitled "K-State Basketball Wallowing in Negativity," Whitlock charged, among other offences, that "many Wildcat fans have turned embarrassingly vulgar, hostile and defensive" because of our losing streak. His article claims that Wildcats fans are creating a dangerous environment because of the "chip on their shoulder."

Whitlock also said "the Wildcats are being swallowed by the enmity, paranoia and feeling of victimization that permeates the K-State fan base and fuels first-year head coach Frank Martin's coaching style. You can't consistently win basketball games while throwing a pity party."

This is not the first time Whitlock has made disparaging comments about K-State fans. On Feb. 1, Jeff Gordon of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch wrote about the victory over the University of Kansas, "Kansas City Star columnist Jason Whitlock heralded the breakthrough victory, but believed their fans needed to tone it down a notch – 'I understand the passion – the losing streak and KU's sudden football ascension heightened the importance of this game – but a K-State alum, Bailey Maxwell, stood courtside, wearing a vulgar T-shirt that accurately reflected the mood and the taunts of KSU's student section ... and I'm well aware that the majority of KSU fans have far more class than to don an obscene T-shirt while sitting on the court,' Whitlock wrote. Yeah, well, 24 years is a long time to go without beating your arch rival on your home court."

Gordon brought up a good point – if K-State's hatred for KU didn't exist, Sunflower Showdowns in all sports ever played at K-State would become just normal games.

Whitlock is entitled to his opinion, but there are many reasons why the press pass given to him by the K-State athletic department seems undeserved. Whitlock obviously doesn't know the Wildcat fans who permeate the culture and society of Manhattan.

Whitlock wasn't there to see the students that got out of bed at 4 a.m. to stand in line for 12 hours to get a good seat at that same KU game. And he must not be around when Aggieville erupts after a game with fans flooding the streets, living and breathing K-State sports, crying with members of the team when they lose and celebrating with them when they win.

Manhattan is not a town filled with an "inferiority complex." Manhattan is K-State. The city is filled with the thirst for its good ol' boys to win. It is the hometown of K-State alumni who both live here and drive hundreds of miles every weekend to see their team win.

These "vulgar" fans Whitlock refers to are not the fans that the true Manhattan knows. True Wildcat fans are fearless and dedicated. They stand in the rain and camp out in the cold to see their team play. And if that makes them seem like "defensive fans, then so be it. Wildcat fans come to see a good game, not to play nice.

FEEDBACK

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected comments.

To the guy who has the two-seat bicycle: You make me happy.

Did you know we ran a story on Tuesday about a man with a two-seated bicycle? Also, he plays a didgeridoo. How sweet is that? And yes, he makes us very happy for agreeing to run a story about him.

So, I'm watching the game, and I'm pretty sure the announcer just claimed that Michael Beasley is a product of global warming.

So this must mean Al Gore is a Kevin Durant fan. We hope Beasley can concentrate more on his "A" game than looking out for the weather, because, don't forget Beasley, we are watching you on YouTube.com.

You can call me the KSU dog whisperer.

How about the K-State campus squirrel whisperer? If anyone is interested, we would love to shoot a photo of someone talking to the campus squirrels.

To the halftime entertainment coordinator: You suck. We want the Lil' Cats Slam Jam every game.

We agree. Also, the Marching Cobras are pretty sweet.

I'm sorry, but I don't like The Beatles or Pink Floyd. Is there something wrong with me?

Yes, there is something wrong with you. You should contact Mercy Regional Health Center as soon as possible.

KSU police report 2 hit-and-runs, theft

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State faculty/staff parking permit was stolen from an employee vehicle Tuesday, according to a K-State Police report. The vehicle was parked in A6 parking lot next to Dickens Hall. The permit was valued at $150.

Also, two hit-and-runs were reported to K-

State police. The first accident occurred at Gate 3 in the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot. The owner of a dark gray Honda Accord said her car was struck on the left rear quarter panel following Tuesday night's game against Colorado, Capt. Don Stubbings said. The total damage was less than $1,000.

The second hit-and-run occurred at 9:30 p.m. in the E3 parking lot near Nichols Hall Tuesday. According to the campus police report, a parking control officer was writing a citation for a burgundy Dodge van parked in a fire lane when the driver of the vehicle arrived and drove away. As the van left, it struck another vehicle. A citation was issued for leaving the scene of a non-injury accident, the report said.

Man arrested for possession of marijuana

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was arrested and confined early Wednesday morning for possession of a controlled substance, criminal use of a weapon and possession of drug paraphernalia, according to a Riley County Police report.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Mol-drup said Mark Vacca, 56, called 911 making outrageous claims and delusional statements from a pay phone at 2010 Tuttle Creek Blvd. When police arrived around 5:25 a.m., they found an unkempt Vacca with a military-style parka swung around his back. Under the parka police found a concealed shotgun and 7.5 grams of marijuana.

Moldrup said a search warrant was later obtained and 35 grams of marijuana were found in Vacca's home at 2137 Patricia Place. RCPD reports said Vacca was later charged with intent to sell drugs. Police also found 99 dosage units of non-prescribed Methadone. Bond was set at $30,000.

Cats look to gain momentum Saturday

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now that the Wildcats have locked up a first-round bye in the Big 12 Conference tournament, it's time to gain another key to success.

The momentum that comes from winning a road game.

K-State (19-10, 9-6 Big 12 Conference) has had little luck on the road lately, losing in its last five trips away from Manhattan.

On Saturday, the Wildcats will have a chance to end the road woes and pick up some momentum before the Big 12 tournament when they face Iowa State at 3 p.m. in Ames, Iowa.

"We need the momentum to focus on trying to get far through the Big 12 tournament," freshman guard Jacob Pullen said. "We need this win, and I think we have the intensity to go get it. Us going on the road and getting this win will just show we are back on track in the Big 12."

The win might have more than just Big 12 implications in determining whether the Wildcats will be the No. 3 or No. 4 seed. Freshman forward Bill Walker pointed out K-State isn't a lock for the NCAA tournament yet.

"We got to get the win," Walker said. "We are not safe from getting cut from the tournament just yet, so we got to get this win and try to get some of those in the Big 12 tournament."

Walker said the first-round bye for the Big 12 tournament will allow the Wildcats to be slightly more rested and ready for their opponents.

"It lets us be rested because we don't have to go out there and compete right away," Walker said. "We get to scout who we are going to play next to try to get a win that way."

With a first-round bye, K-State coach Frank Martin said the goal of playing in the conference tournament championship game becomes more realistic. Still, the bye doesn't make getting to Sunday an easy task, he said.

"It's going to be hard, not just for us, but for everybody because this league is so difficult," Martin said. "If you want to have a chance to play on Sunday, chances are you better have a bye."

K-State broke a four-game losing streak that included three road games Tuesday when it defeated Colorado 78-72 in the Wildcats' home finale. Walker said the losses cost K-State opportunities to be in a better position in the Big 12.

"We had some tough losses besides the KU game," Walker said. "Those losses kind of hurt us with the opportunity to be at the top of the conference."

BEASLEY ELECTED TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS FOR STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

Freshman forward Michael Beasley was elected to two positions up for grabs in the Student Government Association general elections that ended Wednesday night.

Beasley received 29 votes to be elected to a one-year term position on Board of Directors for Student Publications. Beasley also was elected to a two-year term for the same position. Beasley responded with surprise at the news.

"That's crazy," Beasley said. Beasley's only concern was how much work the position would entail.

K-State women outright Big 12 season champs

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

K-State women's basketball players celebrate during their win over KU Wednesday in Lawrence. The Wildcats became outright Big 12 champions Thursday after Oklahoma State defeated Baylor.

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women needed a Baylor loss Thursday night to become outright Big 12 Conference regular season champions.

No. 20 Oklahoma State delivered for the Wildcats, knocking off the No. 8 Bears 72-68 in Waco, Texas.

It was the second time the Cowboys beat Baylor this season.

The loss means K-State (21-8, 13-3 Big 12) will be the No. 1 seed in the Big 12 tournament and will play its first game at noon Wednesday in the Kansas City Municipal Auditorium.

K-State ensured at least a piece of the title Wednesday after defeating KU 61-50 in Lawrence.

TRACK AND FIELD

Sellers crowned conference performer of the year

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After struggling to clear a lower bar at the Big 12 Conference Championships, junior high jumper Scott Sellers said he refocused and made a few technical adjustments.

It paid off.

Sellers cleared 7 feet 6 inches on his next jump, breaking the K-State indoor record, winning the conference high-jump title, and setting the highest indoor collegiate mark this season. With this performance in mind, Big 12 coaches awarded Sellers the title of Big 12 Men's Indoor Performer of the Year this week. Sellers, who was named the Big 12 Men's Outdoor Performer of the Year last season, did not expect the award this time.

"I was surprised because the Big 12 has so much talent," Sellers said. "I feel pretty honored to be considered the performer of the year when there are so many people that week in and week out put in good performances."

Track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said it takes a special performance to win the award because of the talent in the conference. Both times Sellers has won the award, he has held the top collegiate high-jump mark in the country.

"If it had been anything

less than that, he probably wouldn't have won the award, because there are other guys in other events that are doing the same types of things," Rovelto said.

Prior to clearing the bar, at the winning height, Sellers missed his first two attempts at 7-3.75, before narrowly clearing it on his third and final pass. He said he knew he could perform better but felt he was just being lazy with his technique.

"I knew the jump was there," Sellers said. "I knew the power was there - it was just making the right technical adjustments to get everything down for one jump."

Throughout the meet, Sellers was competing against Nebraska's All-American jumper Dusty Jonas. The two have been competing against each other since high school and were deadlocked in the meet until Sellers made his record-breaking jump.

"It was pretty amazing to watch," said freshman high jumper Michael Healey. "I didn't know who was going to take it, then Scott just came out and jumped 7-6 like it was nothing."

After jumping 7-6, Sellers came close to clearing a height of 7-7.25, which would have tied the highest jump of any athlete in the nation this year. Sellers said he had good attempts at that height but his struggles with the lower bars hurt his jumps.

"I knew after jumping 7-6, I could jump higher and I did things right," Sellers said. "I felt good, and I know

Tennis team to host another ranked foe at Ahearn this weekend

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On a four-game losing streak, the No. 67 K-State tennis team will attempt to piece together another batch of solid matches when it entertains No. 46 New Mexico at 11 a.m. Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats, fresh off a 4-3 loss to Kansas, will once again be entering a grueling stretch of play. Including Saturday's duel, the Wildcats will play four duels in nine days. Coach Steve Bietau said he recognizes the significance of the stretch and how New Mexico will challenge the Wildcats on Saturday.

"New Mexico is another good team. We've talked with our team about this stretch between now and spring break where we'll have five matches, and they are all going to be pretty tough," he said. "For maybe different reasons, it may be the travel or the level of the team or something else, but we see all five of these matches as important. We'll see where we are at the end of that stretch."

Against Kansas, the Wildcats took the doubles point on an 8-5 win in the No. 2 spot by freshman Antea Huljev and senior Viviana Yrureta.

Senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova were also victorious, 8-3, in the No. 1 spot.

Huljev and Yrureta provided the only victories in singles play. The wins helped the Wildcats take the lead, before sophomore Natasha Vieira and Klimova lost in the No. 5 and No. 6 spots, respectively. Despite the loss, Bietau said he was pleased with Wednesday's match. He also noted there was room for improvement.

"It was obviously a disappointment to lose yesterday for everyone," he said. "It was a good college tennis match. I certainly don't want to take away or make the loss seem better than it was, but it was a good college tennis match, and they did compete well. We had some things that went awfully well in the match, so it's not like we're starting from ground zero. I end up saying this every year, but it's a matter of getting everyone on the same page, getting everyone playing close to the top of their game."

Bietau also said the improvement of Huljev has been particularly strong.

"She's showing some definite signs of improvement, both in the way we look at her while she's playing and the results."

Huljev improved to 12-9 this season and 5-3 during the spring after Saturday's wins. Improvement also has been seen from Huljev's doubles partner Yrureta.

The senior from Puerto Ordaz, Venezuela, ended a three-match losing streak against Kansas and improved to 10-9 during the year.

Junior Katerina Kudlackova hits a shot during her doubles match with partner senior Olga Klimova. Kudlackova and Klimova defeated Elizaveta Avdeeva and Edina Horvath of KU, 8-3.

Jonathan Knight
COLLEGIAN

"I think that Viviana did a really good job yesterday," Vieira said. "She improved her game by having more patience; she had to break another opponent down by changing her game a little."

Against the Lobos, who are 5-4, the Wildcats will face some formidable players.

The No. 1 singles player, junior Ola Abou-Zekry, has posted a 4-4 record this spring. Freshman Emma Heyman boasts a 4-3 record from the No. 5 spot.

Bietau said he has a clear idea of what he wants to see for the remainder of the season.

"I think in general our players have to do a better job of understanding what they're good at and sticking to that," he said.

Baseball coach says Wildcats ready for home opener

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After starting the season on an eight-game road trip, with the last six all in the state of Texas, the K-State baseball team will finally get to dig into a familiar batters box.

During their stint in Texas, the Wildcats saw strong competition from Southland Conference frontrunners Lamar and UT-San Antonio. K-State went 1-2 against the Southland foes, but nearly swept all three contests before losing both games to UTSA in the last innings of each game.

This weekend's series with the LeMoyné Dolphins (2-7) will begin at 1 p.m. Saturday at Tointon Stadium. Trying to improve on a 3-5 start, the Wildcats will face a team that has seen little success but is battle-tested.

So far, the Dolphins have faced Oral Roberts and Wichita State, both considered traditional NCAA baseball powers. LeMoyné went 0-5 against both, but gave Oral Roberts all it could handle during the three-game series. Wichita State needed a late four-run rally to finally beat LeMoyné Tuesday.

Leading the way offensively for the 2-7 Dolphins is junior Matt Nandin, who is hitting .412 with five runs and three RBI's. Power might not be LeMoyné's prerogative, but hitting for average certainly is. The Dolphins currently have six starters hitting over .320 for the year.

The Wildcat squad brings some new energy from the freshman class as well as the usual contributors. Junior Nate Tenbrink has supplied the power for the Wildcats this season, slugging two home runs (one short of his season performance a year ago) in the 2008 season.

The pitching staff received yet another award this week when senior closer Daniel Edwards was named as one of 78 NCAA pitchers on the Roger Clemens Award watch list.

This marks the third watch list Edwards has been named to this season, including the Brooks Wallace Award and the NCBWA Stopper of the Year watch lists.

The matchup with LeMoyné will begin at 1 p.m. Saturday and Sunday with doubleheaders on both days.

Action for all four games in the series can be heard live on KMAN 1350 or via Junior infielder Nate Tenbrink fields a ball during a game last season. The Wildcats will host LeMoyné in a weekend series starting 1 p.m. Saturday.

EQUESTRIAN Wildcats to host Georgia

By Jonathan Wright
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State equestrian team won its first show of the spring season last week when it defeated the Oklahoma State Cowgirls, 10-9. The Wildcats will try to continue that success this Sunday when the Georgia Bulldogs compete in Manhattan.

The show is the second of three consecutive shows the Wildcats host before the Varsity Equestrian National Championships, which will be April 17-19 in Waco, Texas. K-State is 5-5 on the season, while Georgia is coming in with an impressive 8-2 record.

On the English side, senior Whitney Snyder, who has an individual record of 12-6-2, should lead the Wildcats. Junior Leslie Yates will be leading the Wildcats as well. She has an overall individual record of 10-11-1.

On the Western side, junior Alyssa Freeman and senior Lindsey Salsbury have been important contributors all year. Freeman is coming off an MVP performance in horsemanship against Baylor last week and she will try to improve on her 12-9-1 record. Salsbury picked up another win last week against Baylor, bringing her record this season to 8-2.

"Our girls feel good on our horses and should be able to ride confidently," Western head coach Cassie Williamson said. "We have been working overtime, so I feel really good about everyone competing."

The show will begin at 9 a.m. Sunday at Fox Creek Farms.

KSU RUGBY

Men's rugby team hopes to move into national title contention

By Jose Garcia
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no lack of focus or confidence in the K-State men's rugby club for this weekend's home tournament. Members said the home-field advantage seems to be a big help for the club and makes the mood around practice a little looser and much more confident.

"The crowd will be the 16th, 17th, and 18th man on the field this weekend," said Hale Sloan, president of the rugby club and senior in biological and agricultural engineering. "The crowd will be huge."

The field at Memorial Stadium is one of the only fields in the conference that is regulation size, which makes the team's play smoother and faster. It also helps the team spread the offense out across the whole field. With games against two solid Big 12 Conference opponents, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, the men said they feel a sweep is possible.

"A sweep this weekend would mean a lot for the whole rugby program, not just this team," said Conner Smith, fifth-year student in architectural engineering.

If all goes as planned and the team picks up both wins this weekend, the Wildcats secure a trip to the Western Collegiate Rugby Tournament in Dallas. The ultimate goal for this year's team is a chance to play in the tournament.

Coach Danny Blea said, "In order for us to make it to the Western tournament, we must win these two games this weekend."

Making it to the tournament and winning the championship would mean the team gets an automatic invitation to the club for a trip to nationals later this season. The club is sitting at 1-1 in conference play and 8-3 overall this season. Winning this weekend's tournament would put the club in great shape to stretch the season out past May and make it into the playoffs — leaving the team with a chance to compete for the title.

After beating Benedictine College in its last game, the team is confident going into this weekend's games, Smith said.

"We are looking to beat Oklahoma and Oklahoma State this weekend based on how well we played last game at Benedictine," Smith said.

This weekend's tournament starts at 1:30 p.m. Saturday when the team plays Oklahoma State and concludes at 11 a.m. Sunday against Oklahoma.

Members of Alpha Phi Alpha perform their dance routine in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. They, along with four other campus groups, will perform step routines at Manhattan High School tonight.

Groups to perform step at MHS

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students seeking entertainment tonight can watch a variety of local performers at Manhattan High School.

Several community and K-State groups will perform at the fourth-annual step show, organized by the high school's Black Student Union.

The show will start at 7 p.m., but doors will open at 6 p.m., said Randy Myles, sponsor of the BSU at MHS. Tickets will be $4 at the door.

In addition to BSU's performance, five K-State groups will be stepping.

Fraternities Phi Beta Sigma, Alpha Phi Alpha and Omega Psi Phi and sororities Delta Sigma Theta and Alpha Kappa Alpha are scheduled to perform, Myles said. It will be the sororities' first time to perform at the MHS step show, he said.

Other entertainment will include the group High Poyntz Studios, dance group Girls with a Future and music from D.J. Hicks.

The step show has been an annual event since 2005, when stepping was first introduced to MHS students, Myles said.

The show has grown at larger every year since its debut, and this year's show is expected to be the largest yet he said.

Myles, originally from Chicago, stepped with his chapter of Phi Beta Sigma at Eastern Illinois University, he said.

When he came to Manhattan, he brought his skills to MHS.

However, stepping will not be the only dance style on display tonight.

Girls with a Future is a group of Fort Riley teens that will be doing a hip-hop dance routine, said Gayle Martin, administrative assistant at Fort Riley's Middle School Teen Center.

The group sees performing as a great way to bond together and reach out to the community, Martin said.

"We feel that they want to see this from us, and so we try to do our best every year to give the community what they want," Myles said.

Myles said the BSU members have been anxiously awaiting the performance for some time.

"Our group is very excited for this," Myles said. "I can't even explain how excited we are. We look forward to this every year."

Wildcats are not only seen in Manhattan and around the Midwest. They have been popping up all over the world since 1969, when the K-State Alumni Association began the Traveling Wildcats program.

The program offers various opportunities for travelers who would like to visit other countries or discover new places within the United States.

Traveling Wildcats is an open group and travelers do not need to be K-State alumni or a member of the K-State Alumni Association. Participants can bring friends and relatives.

"The program has student travelers very rarely, but we are looking at some young alumni trips," said Terin Daily, associate director of administrative programs at the K-State Alumni Association.

Historically, the most popular destinations are Italy and Germany. A lot of tourists have interest in Alaska, Daily said.

Some of the most affordable tours are Alaska Cruise and Ukraine with Romania. Those who want to travel around the world by private jet should be ready to spend more than $50,000.

There are some advantages of being involved in the Traveling Wildcats program, which can make a journey more convenient.

"You are traveling with like-minded people - with other K-Staters," Daily said.

She said the companies they work with are very reputable.

"We check their work thoroughly before signing up with them," she said. The program's officers also provide information that will enhance travelers' experience.

Norm and Claudia Jackson, both K-State alumni from Topeka, have visited almost every part of the world since retirement.

"We enjoy traveling in a small group - that's why we chose Traveling Wildcats," Claudia Jackson said.

"We are not a museum kind of people; for us it is more interesting to explore nature, Australia and New Zealand are fascinating places from this point of view," she said.

Rochelle Bevers of Denver, Colo., is taking advantage of the program though she is not a K-State alumni. She said she will go to Peru next week.

"I never visit again the places where I have already been. I am always looking for something new," she said.

The fact that she is not a shy person helped her to truly enjoy the trips, she said.

"I have never had a breakfast or dinner alone," Bevers said. "Everywhere I find nice people that are exceedingly accepting."

Though she said she feels absolutely comfortable while traveling alone, the Traveling Wildcats program is reasonably priced and offers the company of a group of people from the same area.

Bill Binford, 1954 K-State alumnus from Hutchinson, Kan., said he is looking forward to visiting China.

"We expect to have a good time in another part of the world, meet local people and, of course, see the Great Wall," he said.

Aggieville to celebrate 'Fake Patty's' on Saturday

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The excitement has been building for days, and the time is almost here. Saturday will mark Manhattan's second-annual "Fake Patrick's Day" celebration.

Participating Aggieville bars will open their doors at 9 a.m. in anticipation of being crowded with green-clad college students early in the morning.

Not to be confused with the original St. Patrick's Day event, "Fake Patrick's Day" takes place one week before the holiday.

The traditional celebration will be on March 15. This year will mark the 30th anniversary of Aggieville's St. Patrick's Day parade, road races and Blarney Breakfast.

Evann Tuttle, administrator for the Aggieville Business Association, said business owners came up with the Fake Patty's concept to cater to students who will be out of town for the real St. Patrick's Day, which is during K-State's spring break.

Tuttle said "Fake Patrick's Day" is not sponsored by ABA, but the ABA supports its members during the celebration. He said he hopes it will be a successful business day for all involved.

Aggieville should be cleaned up for the next weekend's events with plenty of time to spare, Tuttle said.

"Hopefully it'll turn over in just under a day," Tuttle said. "We'd like business to go on as usual on Sunday morning."

Bars will be giving out T-shirts and offering drink and food specials for the occasion. KSDB-FM 91.9 will also be handing out T-shirts at several Aggieville locations. The radio station worked with Aggieville businesses to get sponsors for 1,000 T-shirts they will be giving to customers.

Several bars will also bring back the popular green-colored beer.

"Of course we're going to have some green beer," said Kris Smith, general manager of Kite's Bar and Grill.

He said Kite's will also offer a breakfast buffet.

"I think it's just a great opportunity for the students to celebrate before they head out on spring break," Smith said.

Participants walk through Aggieville during last year's St. Patrick's Day parade. Hundreds of K-State students will flock to Aggieville on Saturday for the Fake Patrick's Day celebration.

"Last year went well."

Dusty Garner, manager of PJ's Restaurant and Pub, said the bar plans to host an all-day free concert to benefit the Humane Society.

"We'll probably be pouring green beer like it's our job," Garner said.

Heather Hill, manager of Ballard's Sporting Goods, said other businesses in Aggieville can expect an increase in business on Saturday. Hill said she expected it to be a busy day for T-shirt and St. Patrick's Day accessory sales.

"This is one of the biggest celebrations of the year for Aggieville," said Pat Atchity, manager of Tubby's Sports Bar and Fat's Bar and Grill. "The bars came together to do this for the students."

Dress properly on St. Patty's

Get ready, K-State. Fake and real St. Patrick's Days are just around the corner. Ah, yes, the one day of the year, besides home football games, when the entire town is expected to roll into Aggieville around 8 a.m. for an all-day drink-fest. What better excuse to down pints of green beer and justify a splurge on a bottle of Guinness than celebrating the Irish?

PODHAIJSKY

The most important thing to always remember on these two days, of course, is to drink lawfully and responsibly. However, the second most important thing to remember is to dress responsibly. Some of you might remember an article I wrote last semester on what not to wear when tailgating. For those of us heading to the 'Ville Saturday, the same general guidelines apply. But for those who missed it, let's review and add some specific rules for St. Patrick's Day.

1. Ladies, please: no micro-mini skirts, even though you might have the legs for one after sweating it out at the Rec the past few months while preparing for spring break. Once you start to lose your footing after a couple of Belfast Bombers, trust me, no one wants to see your new green thong. Save it for your boyfriend.

2. Guys – no matter how funny you and your boys think it will be to take a green T-shirt to Threads, have some sexual or obscene saying printed on the back and wear it to the bars, no one else – especially girls – is going to find it humorous.

Let me explain. Last year, my friend's boyfriend and some of his buddies made St. Patrick's Day T-shirts together. However, the only thing on them related to the holiday was the color green. The slogan was inappropriate and offensive.

My friend refused to let him wear it out, and he couldn't understand why because he and his friends swore it was just a joke and thought everyone would find it funny. But after letting him ask many women what they would think if they saw some guy wearing the shirt, one of the most popular phrases from the women was "tool bag." Do your reputation a favor, and save these shirts for a guy's night in.

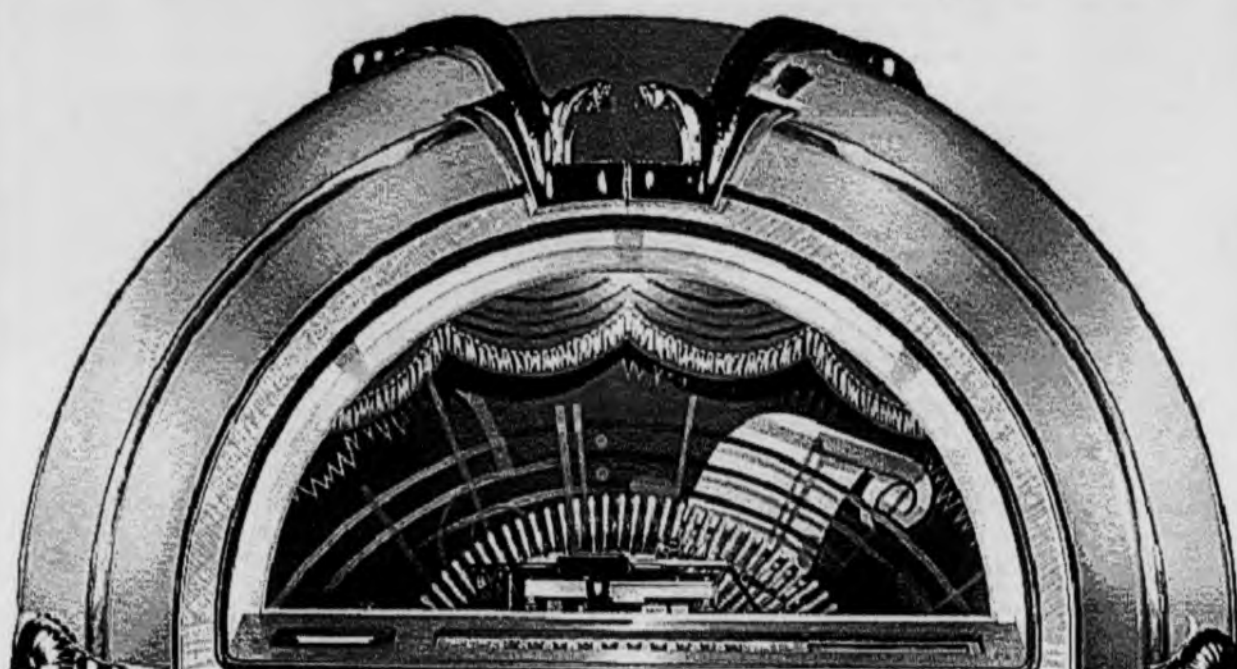

3. Just like the tailgating rules, stilettos and pumps should be completely avoided during the Irish celebrations. St. Patrick's and Fake St. Patrick's Day are all-day events. By 3 p.m., you probably would be carrying them anyway, so stick to flats or old tennis shoes. Don't wear any kicks you're afraid to ruin. Who knows where the day will take you, so be prepared for the worst and dress for comfort, not fashion.

4. Don't bring anything designer or expensive – clothes and accessories – out with you. Chances are you will leave your purse or a pair of sunglasses at the bar, or you'll end up with some sort of green stain on your shirt or pants by the end of the evening. Just take the essentials – cash, I.D. and ChapStick. You'll be way less bummed the next morning when you're out $12 for your ID than if you're out $212 for your Burberry scarf.

5. Dress in layers. It's supposed to start out chilly Saturday and climb to a comfortable 46 degrees, so wear the appropriate long-sleeve T-shirt, sweatshirt, jacket, or combination of those. Again, make sure you're not afraid to rip or ruin any clothing items, unless you plan on being extremely careful. But let's get serious here – the day's going to be a little

TRENDS THROUGH THE DECADES

Flash from the past

1950s styles still evident in new century

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ever considered wearing your grandparents' clothes? Well, you might be sporting their style without knowing it.

Fashion styles from the 1950s have regained popularity in several different forms. Hair, shoes, clothing and music are all showing traces of the '50s these days.

Marla Day, senior curator for the apparel, textiles and interior design department, said men's hairstyles have recently resembled those of 1950s movie stars.

"Men are using more product in their hair for the short, messy look," Day said. "It's definitely something we're seeing young men wear. It's something still going on, and that's where it started."

Day said James Dean and Elvis Presley greatly influenced men's fashion styles in the '50s, including the wild hair. Dean also made the white T-shirt, jeans and jacket ensemble popular, which men still wear today.

"For men, these are people they looked up to because they were movie stars," Day said.

Derek Hoff, assistant professor of history, added Marlon Brando to the list of influential 1950s male movie stars. He said Brando started the leather jacket trend with his movie "The Wild One" in 1953. This fashion is also gaining popularity.

Day said women's clothing in the '50s emphasized the hourglass silhouette (a narrow waist and full skirt) and neckline. Though full skirts haven't come back in full swing, the pencil skirt, another '50s trend, has been re-popularized in the last few years.

"The pencil skirt with a wide belt and white sweater – that's definitely something they wore in the '50s," Day said.

Short cropped jackets – Jackie O. style – have made a comeback, Day said, and shirts with sleeves that have ruffled hems also are a trend from the '50s.

Formal suits for men have re-

mained relatively the same for years. However, the suit cut that is popular today is more slimming and fits closer to the body, like suits from the '50s. In contrast, men wore boxy suits with wider lapels in the 1980s.

Women's formal dresses in the '50s were often strapless or had spaghetti straps, which is still very common in fashion today. Day said her daughter, who recently graduated from college, often would have cocktail parties where attendees would wear formal dresses. This is also a trend from the '50s that has become a popular alternative to spending money at the bars.

Stilettos, ankle-strap heels and ballerina flats are often seen today in women's fashion. Day said these shoes all originated in the '50s.

"Audrey Hepburn and other stars certainly made [ballerina flats] popular," Day said. "That was the shoe to wear, and they're everywhere now."

Aside from fashion trends, the 1950s greatly influenced music when it started rock-n-roll. However, Hoff said rock-n-roll in the '50s was all about integration, which has changed today.

"When rock was born, it was about racial mixing and challenging the status quo," Hoff said. "That meaning is lost today."

He said rock-n-roll's fusion of blues and country brought the styles of both black and white people together. Today, he said the music is "splintered." Some music appeals more to black populations, and other music appeals more to white people.

Steve Maxwell, professor of music, teaches a new class at K-State about the history of rock-n-roll. He said middle-class teenagers would listen to rhythm and blues as a form of rebellion against their parents. But as it grew in popularity, it also became a form of social change. Maxwell said artists still talk about social change in music, but race issues are much easier to deal with today because of how U.S. culture has changed.

He said rock bands today have been returning to the band format that began in the '50s – a lead singer, guitarist, bass player and drummer – instead of having larger bands like in the 1980s.

He said current bands have been sporting Buddy Holly fashion trends from the '50s as well. Sweater vests, skinny ties and horn-rimmed glasses have especially been popular among British bands.

Maxwell said music has adapted so much from rock-n-roll that it's hard to define rock-n-roll anymore.

"There are so many things out there. There's not just this one thing," Maxwell said. "At that time it really was just rock-n-roll. That's a big difference."

Little-known comedies still worth watching

In the wake of a potentially epic Fake Patrick's Day celebration, a trip to the theater might put too much stress on the wallet. Here's a look at two comedies recently released on DVD. Neither came to Manhattan during their theatrical runs, and both will help nurse the hangover while you prepare for spring break.

"The Darjeeling Limited"

Reviews by Brendan Praeger

Wes Anderson, writer and director of "Rushmore" and "The Royal Tenenbaums," has made a habit of creating quirky and touching movies with large doses of subtle humor.

In "The Darjeeling Limited," frequent Anderson colleagues Owen Wilson and Jason Schwartzman join Adrien Brody as three brothers taking a trip across India to reconnect after their father's untimely death. Their train, the Darjeeling Limited, provides the setting for most of the film.

The film exhibits all of Anderson's strengths as a writer and director. The eclectic soundtrack, interesting cinematography and diverse characters provide the perfect playground for the three main actors.

The DVD also includes a short film, "Hotel Chevalier," starring Schwartzman and Natalie Portman. It's the perfect companion piece to the main feature, though it makes more sense after repeated viewings.

"Death at a Funeral"

★★★★☆

"Death at a Funeral" takes a more direct approach to comedy. It could be described as the ultimate situation comedy, as the film becomes funnier and funnier while the plot spins out of control.

The story follows a family's attempt to give the father in the family a dignified funeral. It takes place in the span of a couple hours, and no time is wasted on unnecessary exposition or sentimentality.

A funeral might not seem like the ideal setting for a comedy, but toss in some accidentally-ingested acid, the secret gay lover of the deceased and a bunch of colorful British family members, and the movie almost spins out of control.

"Death at a Funeral" hits the perfect notes for a comedy. It's hilarious, relatable and exaggerated without being unbelievable or insincere. It didn't receive the attention it deserved in theaters – don't miss it the second time around.

CELEBRITY NEWS

CELEBRITIES EXPRESS REMORSE FOR SWAYZE

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — After news of Patrick Swayze's shocking diagnosis hit Hollywood on Wednesday, his celebrity friends have responded with an outpouring of love and support.

SWAYZE

On Thursday's "The View," Whoopi Goldberg expressed her concern and said it was Patrick who insisted that she play the part of psychic Oda Mae Brown in "Ghost." "I have not spoken to him, but I will tell you his physician went public and said [Patrick] has got a very limited amount of the disease," Whoopi said of her former co-star. "I won an Oscar because of Patrick Swayze. So baby ... we want you to feel better and we'll talk soon I hope."

Meanwhile, stars also expressed shock at the 16th Annual Alzheimer's Benefit – A Night at Sardi's on Wednesday night in Los Angeles.

"I just wish him a speedy recovery and hope that whatever treatments he's going through go well," Michael Chiklis told Access Hollywood.

Even those who have never met Patrick expressed their sympathy and prayers. "I've never met Patrick, but he's very good friends with my best friends and I'm sure they're devastated. We wish him well and Godspeed," former "Seinfeld" star Jason Alexander said.

But it may have been "Boston Legal" executive producer David E. Kelley who summed up the reaction in one word.

"Horrrifying," Kelley told Access.

Horrrifying indeed, when you take a closer look at the statistics. According to the National Cancer Institute, 37,000 people in the U.S. will be diagnosed with pancreatic cancer this year – 33,000 will die from it.

In fact, it has the highest fatality rate of all cancers and the average life expectancy after diagnosis is three to six months.

"Most of the patients, or the significant portion of the patients, die soon after the diagnosis," pancreatic cancer researcher Dr. Laszlo Boros told Access.

Yet despite the 99 percent mortality rate, Dr. Boros of the Hirshberg Foundation for Pancreatic Cancer Research said the statement from Swayze's doctor that his patient had "a very limited amount of disease" might be an encouraging sign.

"This probably means that he has a small cancer or small tumor and the likelihood of spread is small at this point," Dr. Boros explained.

SPEARS' FATHER TO STAY CONSERVATOR, FOR NOW

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Being Britney Spears' father is now a paying gig — through most of the summer, at least.

A court has ordered the troubled pop star's estate to pay James Spears' $2,500 in weekly compensation and authorized him to lease a car.

SPEARS

On Wednesday, his authority to handle his daughter's affairs, which was scheduled to expire March 10, was extended until July 31.

Los Angeles Superior Court Commissioner Reva Goetz ordered the weekly payments in documents released by the court Thursday but signed on Wednesday. James Spears, who recently worked as a caterer, was named conservator of his daughter and co-conservator of her estate after she was hospitalized twice in January.

Goetz also ordered Spears' estate to make a $58,800 payment to Samuel D. Ingham III, the court-appointed attorney who represents Britney Spears in the conservatorship case. She also authorized the pop star's psychiatrist to hire two other doctors and pay them retainers totaling $9,000 from her estate.

Students awarded to pursue nonprofit career opportunities

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Accepting a good challenge is nothing new to K-State students Molly Hamm and Anthony Carter.

Hamm, junior in English, and Carter, senior in social science, were named Next Generation Nonprofit Leaders by American Humanics this semester.

"The wide variety of jobs in nonprofit organizations is one of the great aspects," Hamm said of pursuing a career in that direction. "I will always be able to find a new challenge."

Next Generation, which is based in Kansas City, Mo., prepares leaders like Carter and Hamm for the nonprofit sector. The two students were accepted into a two-year program and they will receive a $4,500 stipend for living and education expenses while completing an internship with a nonprofit organization.

The Next Generation program exists through a national alliance of colleges, universities and organizations to help prepare students to become leaders. In 2007, a $5 million grant was given to Next Generation by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation.

HAMM

"[The grant] helps students stay committed to the nonprofit field," Hamm said.

Students earn internships in many different areas in this field.

Hamm, who spearheaded the "Greeks Go Green" campaign with the K-State Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils, has an internship this summer with The People Speak program in Washington, D.C. The internship will take place at the United Nations Foundation as part of the Institute on Philanthropy and Voluntary Service at Georgetown University, Hamm said.

She said she decided to pursue her career in nonprofit organizations because she enjoyed the work she did through student organizations and wanted to help for "the common good of the student body."

Carter has an internship with the K-State Alumni Association, where he is learning about nonprofit fundraising, budgeting and staff evaluations, Carter said.

He spent last summer in Washington, D.C., as an intern for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, creating a database of resolutions and policies from national conventions.

"It's introducing you to the nonprofit field, which is growing," Carter said.

Hamm and Carter are working on leadership studies minors with a nonprofit leadership focus. The minor is the only such program in the state.

Carter and Hamm were nominated for the award by their adviser Olivia Collins, who is the head of the nonprofit section of the minor. The two were selected for the award by a national panel of university, nonprofit and philanthropic leaders.

According to a K-State Media Relations press release, Kala Stroup, president of American Humanics, said, "The nonprofit internship allows students to apply what they have learned in the classroom to the daily routine of a nonprofit professional."

Senate approves privilege fee increases

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate approved three increases in privilege fees Thursday night.

This means students will collectively pay $60,000 more in privilege fees by fiscal year 2011. The additional funds will be allocated to the Peters Recreation Complex and K-State sports clubs.

The Recreational Services operations budget privilege fee will increase to $617,000 by 2011. These funds will be used to compensate for an increase in the student pay scale, inflationary costs and the inclusion of sports club supervision, according to the agenda. The bill passed 44-0-2.

An increase in the Recreational Services repair and replacement reserve privilege fee passed 45-0-1. A total of $10,000 will be added to the fee for fiscal year 2009 and $10,500 for fiscal years 2010 and 2011. According to the agenda, the funds will be used to repair damages, replace major components and maintain recreational buildings. The funds may not, however, be used to add materially to the value of any building.

Another bill approved Thursday night will increase privilege fees from $50,000 for school year 2008-09 to $54,000 for school year 2010-11. The extra money will be used in allocations to sports groups to compensate for increased travel costs. The bill passed 45-0-1.

An amendment that would prevent organizations from receiving allocations from the student activity fee if the organization is already receiving funds from Student Governing Association was sent to final action at the next Senate meeting.

Student Senate already uses this policy, but before this amendment there was no formal backing, said Student Body President Matt Wagner.

Senators will vote on the amendments and an increase of $140,000 in student privilege fees next week, said Sen. Clint Blaes, senior in agriculture communications and journalism.

The approval of fiscal year 2009 student-centered tuition enhancements will also be on next week's agenda.

Senate also approved allocations for the International Tuba and Euphonium Association, the Student Health Advisory Committee, the African Students Union and KSU Potter's Guild.

Senate also commended the Black Student Union, Jon McClelland and K-State Salina Student Governing Association for hosting their meeting last week, and 2007-08 Senators and Interns who served their term "with honors."

Women were first to play basketball

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the men's basketball team now fills more seats in Bramlage Coliseum than the women's team, women were the first to play the sport at K-State.

On May, 25, 1901, the first basketball game on campus was played by women in a calisthenics class at Kansas State Agricultural College. The purple squad defeated the red squad 9-2. The uniforms consisted of long bloomers and shirts that had to cover all skin except the women's hands and faces.

After the initial game, women were not allowed to play outside. They continued to play in the Women's Auditorium, which was located where Holtz Hall is now.

In 1902, the university's faculty denied the women's team's request to play intercollegiate games. Interestingly, the student team beat a team of faculty members 46-4 months earlier.

The next year the men's team played its first intercollegiate game, losing to Haskell College 60-7.

The women continued to play in intramural leagues, gaining popularity in the 1920s and 30s.

Hazel Blecha, who played basketball from 1915-17, told K-Stater magazine in 2001 that the players did not move much because their uniforms constricted them so much. She also said the court was designed in three sections, and players were not allowed to leave their respective section or they would be called for a foul.

"We stayed in our assigned position," said Blecha, who was 106 at the time of the interview. "Uniforms were so bulky, we did not dare run around for fear of getting tangled up and falling down."

The K-State women's team did not play its first intercollegiate game until 1968, and the first women's basketball scholarship was awarded in 1976.

Many students fail to get adequate sleep

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six students were spotted sleeping in various spots around Hale Library on one trip Thursday afternoon, possibly from a lack of sleep at night.

A common problem students have is not getting a good night's sleep. Whether it be from a busy schedule restricting time, stress or a number of other reasons, it has remained something students battle each semester.

Heather Alterman, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education, works an overnight job and said her sleep total ranges from 3-8 hours depending on the night. Likewise, Liz Harris, junior in family and consumer education, said she only gets about 4-5 hours a night. She said she usually sleeps at home and sometimes at work.

Like others, Alterman finds herself sleeping on campus during the day.

"On Thursdays, I always sit in the back rows of every class, because I fall asleep, and it's obvious," Alterman said.

Fred Newton, director of K-State Counseling Services, cited recent research with K-State freshmen that 60 percent of students had sleep totals that fell within the standard for amount of sleep recommended, while 40 percent did not.

"I just had a conversation with a student that went to sleep at 8 a.m. and thought they would sleep the whole day, but that would really mess with your practices," Newton said.

Newton said there are many reasons why students fail to reach the standard amount of sleep. He said stress is the No. 1 problem students complain about. It could also be irregular behavior like students staying up until 2 a.m. one night and then 10 p.m. the next. Bad practices, like exercising or consuming caffeine before going to sleep, could also keep students awake, he said.

Newton also said the underlying issue could be caused by physiological problems or sleep disorders. If that is the case, people should be evaluated, Newton said. Students can visit the sleep clinic at Mercy Regional Health Center.

"No one ever dies from lack of sleep," Newton said. "And what that means is eventually everyone falls asleep. The body cannot handle staying awake. The problem is getting adequate sleep, which is what we are talking about. It varies — some people need 6 hours and some people need 9 or 10 hours."

Sometimes a short nap is not enough for a student to make up for inadequate hours of sleep.

"You need to go through all the stages of sleep to get the benefits of sleep. That usually takes 3 hours to go through a full sleep, and at night most people go through 2 cycles. There are various levels of stages, which can be measured by brain-wave activity," Newton said.

When students can find the time but still have trouble falling asleep, Newton said they can try different methods to actually fall asleep.

"One of the things you do is calm yourself down, you can play the right music, dim your lights, eat the right foods," Newton said. "You can do a pattern to try and get yourself in a rhythm; some people do calming things like read a book."

SLEEP STATISTICS

- One in three adults get 6.5 or less hours of sleep nightly.
- 43% of adults say they are so sleepy during the day that it interferes with their daily activities a few days a month.
- Nearly one quarter (22%) of young adults are occasionally or frequently late for work due to sleepiness, versus 11% of 30 to 64 year olds.

- 13% of young adults admit to occasionally or frequently falling asleep at work.
- 55% of those between the ages of 18 and 29 report that they "wake unrefreshed."
- The percentage of young adults suffering from significant daytime sleepiness (33%) rivals that of shift workers (29%).

Language professor has mixed background

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Robert Corum developed an interest for foreign languages at an early age. His grandmother, an immigrant from Hungary, always spoke in Hungarian.

Corum then took classes in different languages while in middle school — he studied French, German and Spanish. But Corum developed a passion for French, and after he received extensive support from his high-school teachers, he pursued the language in college.

Almost four decades later, Corum, 60, serves as the head of the Department of Modern Languages. After a brief teaching stint with the University of Southern California-Los Angeles, Corum came to K-State in 1977. He said he intended to stay with the university for only three or four years before he moved back to his native East Coast.

"Here I am — still," Corum said during an interview in his Eisenhower Hall office. "It grows on you. It's an easy, nice place to live — nice people, nice students, relaxed atmosphere. And, of course, after my experience, I like to point out those advantages to our faculty recruits who come through for interviews."

Serving as a faculty facilitator is one of the most important roles as Modern Languages department head, Corum said — he allows faculty to pursue their ideas and plans within the mission of the department.

"The world is constantly changing, and for a department like modern languages, we have to change with the different international commitments and contributions," Corum said.

During his time at K-State, Corum said the department has continuously expanded. Modern Languages now offers 11 languages, faculty and staff members within the department represent 24 countries, and the department's enrollment is twice its amount 15 years ago, he said.

"There's much more of an international accent now and emphasis," Corum said. "It's one of the university's core missions — globalization and how the university can play a leading role in international initiatives. Modern languages has a key role in that."

A "Professeur" sticker is taped to Corum's desk in an office he described as "eclectic." His bookshelf is filled completely with French textbooks, and some could be considered antiques. A reproduction of Henri Fantin-Latour's "Musée du Jeu de Paume" captures the eye when first entering his office — the painting contains deep sentimental, personal meaning, Corum said.

But models and drawings of an American classic also surround Corum's office — the Studebaker. A 1941 Studebaker calendar hangs to the right of his bookshelf, and a small model of a red 1963 Studebaker car sits low on a shelf near the door.

After more than 30 years at K-State, Corum said his most memorable event at K-State took place when he received his first teaching award with the university. In 1982-83, Corum received the Outstanding Teacher Award in the College of Arts and Sciences, which served as "really palpable recognition by my colleagues and students," he said.

"I think that's the greatest reward that any teacher can have — to know that what you do is making somebody's life more interesting — opening doors, widening horizons for people because of what you did to help them and to allow them to see things that they may not have seen before," Corum said.

Fresh or Faux

Couples have tough decision on which flower type is right for wedding

By Sarah Rasmussen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brides-to-be have many choices to consider, but the choice between real and fake flowers for the wedding is one decision that is overlooked. While fresh flowers seem to be the most popular, silk flowers have become more popular since their 1970s versions.

Both kinds of flowers have benefits and drawbacks, which can make the decision harder. For example, real flowers have a fragrance that silk flowers do not have. Silk flowers last forever in near-perfect condition while real flowers wilt and usually die within a week after the big day.

Another key factor for many brides is their budget. In an interview for www.buzzle.com, Paul Ajao, a UK-based florist, said the idea that silk flowers are less expensive than the real thing is a myth. He said silk flowers can end up costing just as much as real flowers. If quality is what's wanted, he said, brides probably won't end up saving any money by going the silk flower route.

When it comes to the different types of flowers, the selection of nontraditional flowers will vary with the season. However, all kinds of flowers are becoming more accessible than ever because they can be shipped to and from anywhere in the world year-round.

Jenny Yankey, store manager of Acme Gifts, said the store can order almost any flower from its wholesaler in Kansas City. Acme does not make actual wedding day bouquets, but their employees do make sample bouquets and will make large arrangements for either the reception table or the actual wedding. They also can order flowers in bulk if brides do some research about what kind of flowers they want.

Yankey said the store has considered doing weddings, but said it would need more resources to make it work.

"We've thought about it. I think if we had more employees, and if we had maybe a bigger space, we might do that," she said. "We just don't have enough people. We can do Valentine's Day, so if we can do that we can do anything, but that's 20 people here at a time."

Yankey also said there are some benefits to using real flowers.

"They're prettier, and it's just so much more of an impression," Yankey said. "Yeah, you can keep fake flowers, but you can always dry the real flowers."

Ron Studebaker, general manager of Hobby Lobby, said brides might choose artificial flowers because they won't wilt at the worst possible moment, and they can be reused after the wedding.

"Our sales have increased, and as you've seen, the quality of the artificial flowers has gotten much better over the years," he said.

"We carry everything that our warehouse has available, but if anybody needs a larger quantity of what we do carry, we can certainly order them and have them in within a week," Studebaker said. "We have a basic amount of each particular variety that we carry."

Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral, said the shop does flowers for about 2-3 weddings per weekend between early spring to late fall. Employees have incorporated faux flowers in their floral options since her brother first opened the store, but 99 percent of the weddings still use fresh flowers.

"I'm absolutely a fresh flower fan," Miller said. "If they ask me the difference, I would say I would always choose fresh over artificial because the artificial is made of the same material the dresses are, and in that case, they tend to not photograph as well."

Miller also said the impression of artificial flowers is not comparable to fresh flowers. "There's nothing better than a fresh beautiful flower. You just can't capture that," she said.

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Artificial flowers are much more detailed and look more realistic now than they used to.

Love started on playground leads to engagement almost 15 years later

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

I pushed her on the swing set, chased her in games of tag and asked her to marry me ... in first grade.

At that time she ran away screaming, but it seems I was right all along as she said "yes" to the same question on January 16.

After finishing first grade in Holyrood, Kan., my family moved a whopping seven miles away to Clafin, Kan. I didn't see her again until I was 16 years old and starting my first job as a grocery store clerk back in good 'ol Holyrood.

Leann had been working there for a while when I started and already knew the ropes pretty well, but I didn't. I remember a specific moment when I knocked a whole stack of Jell-O boxes off a shelf and marked about 50 items the same price because I was too absent-minded to change the stamp numbers in the pricing gun. Apparently it was "adorable."

I started getting hints she was interested a few months after working together. When prom time rolled around, I was trapped into going with her. I had the time of my life at a dance and an after-prom party - two events I didn't initially have a desire to attend. That's when I knew there was something there.

At her school's prom there was a points system to win prizes. I won a ton of points and decided I didn't need anything. So, naturally, I gave them to her so she could get something better.

She picked out a $20 gift certificate and gave it to me. I used it to take us on our first date, after which I asked her to be my girlfriend.

My first visit with her dad lasted nearly two and a half hours. I spoke with him about everything from football to former presidents and the invention of the light bulb.

After the awkwardness was gone, we started really enjoying each other's company, returning from movie dates to lay on the back of my car and stare at the sky. It sounds corny but we had some great conversations during those times.

By the time we were ready to graduate high school, we were already too close to try a long-distance relationship, so we agreed to find a school together and it didn't take us too many trips to figure out we wanted to go to K-State. I started out in journalism and she started in kinesiology. After nearly three years she changed her major three times, ending up in horticulture. I'm still in journalism.

HOW'D I ASK HER?

One of our favorite pastimes is just watching movies. So, I started taking off her promise ring to fiddle with it every evening we were together. One night, when I was sure she was used to my habit, I took off the promise ring and replaced it with the engagement ring while she was looking me in the eye. When she finally saw it she literally gasped, then I popped the question.

Apparently she likes me a lot more now than in first grade - she didn't run away screaming.

Our engagement is going to be long compared to most. We want to wait until after graduation for a variety of reasons, and that might or might not happen before June 2009, which is what we're hoping for.

Get outta here Eloping becoming more popular wedding option

By Carly Hannon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eloping was once a way for couples to get married who were thought to be too young or who were trying to avoid their parents' disapproval. Today, when couples elope, it's usually for fun or because they lack the funds necessary for a traditional wedding.

Because eloping is more widely accepted today, couples said they are finding it to be a great way to tie the knot without many of the hassles that come with wedding planning and spending big.

Two years ago, Dale Murphy, freshman in computer science, and his fiancée decided to have a simple courthouse wedding. The entire guest list included a judge and some close friends as witnesses. Murphy said the couple exchanged vows and rings and went out for a nice dinner and drinks with their friends after the wedding.

"Why spend all that money on one day, just to tell my wife that I love her?" Murphy said.

Though having children and not wanting to spend much money played important roles in the couple's choice of a courthouse ceremony, Murphy said the idea of a customary wedding just didn't suit them.

"We're both not into traditional," he said. "We would have liked to have been able to run away to Memphis or Las Vegas and not told anyone — just been able to run away."

Maxine Ross, Riley County District Court clerk, said courthouse weddings are common in Manhattan because of the high volume of military personnel and college students. She said the process for a courthouse wedding is simple and inexpensive.

A couple must first obtain a state wedding license. Both the bride and groom, who must be at least 18 years of age, apply for the license in the district county clerk's office.

Both applicants must provide their full name, date of birth, and either a social security card or driver's license. There is a three-day wait period, after which time the applicants can then return to the district county clerk's office to pick up their license.

The fee for a license is $50. Once the marriage license is obtained, it is valid for up to six months, so couples can have their ceremony performed anywhere in the state of Kansas, Ross said.

"We have a lot of individuals that come in to do [a courthouse wedding]," Ross said. "Once they have their license, they're given a list of three judges that can perform their civil ceremony. After they pick which judge they want, they are referred to the judge's office to schedule their wedding."

Ross said Valentine's Day and Feb. 29 have been popular days for couples to get married at the courthouse this year.

Employees of wedding boutiques in Manhattan said they have seen elopements rise in popularity. Melanie Gruber, Celebrations of the Heart manager, said she has helped many brides who needed a dress quickly.

"We have quite a bit of couples that plan on getting married at the courthouse," she said. "Some also go to Las Vegas, but most of them just do a simple wedding at the courthouse."

Gruber said most brides who are planning to elope choose simpler styles of wedding gowns without long trains and extravagant embroidery.

"Typically it takes a manufacturer about 12 weeks to make a dress; some companies can do it in three weeks," she said. "But girls who are planning to do a courthouse wedding or something similar just buy a dress off the rack."

Honeymoons a necessity after planning strife, wedding

By Elise Nimitz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A honeymoon, no matter where the destination, can provide a reprieve for newlyweds, after emptying pockets and wrangling relatives for wedding planning.

Emily Smith, 2007 graduate in secondary education, said that after talking to other couples, she couldn't wait to go to Jamaica with her husband.

"We wanted to get away and not see everybody," Smith said. "We heard a lot of good things about Jamaica — number one, the warm weather, number two, you go to the beach and you don't do anything. It was great."

Smith and her husband, Nick, were married in October and waited until January to take their honeymoon. She said they considered a cold-weather destination like Colorado to go skiing, but they chose a Sandals resort, Grande Ocho Rios, for its all-inclusive package.

Roni Deeds, travel agent at AAA in Manhattan, said warm-weather destinations are more popular with just-married couples, even though weddings happen all year.

"We rarely see cold-weather destinations for honeymoons," Deeds said. "I think maybe the reason for that is because a Caribbean vacation is less expensive than an Alaskan vacation. There's not a whole lot of extra money — after a wedding — to do a more expensive vacation like that."

Tara Marsh, travel agent at Jade Travel in Manhattan, said trips to the Caribbean and Mexico are most popular from September to November, and Alaskan cruises only run from the end of May through August.

"It's just a lot cooler there in the summer," Marsh said. "The majority of the packages are cruises or cruise tours with a land tour in areas of Alaska."

Marsh said Jade Travel works with companies that provide package trips, or the agency also can build a package for clients. She said this time of year is the busiest for booking, and couples have been scheduling consistently since the Manhattan bridal fair in January.

Smith said one drawback to taking a ski trip for a honeymoon was not having a package deal.

"In the mountains you have to pay for every little thing," she said. "The beach was mostly all-inclusive, but there were hidden costs like tipping all the time to get good service."

Like Jade Travel, AAA also offers personalized service for customers. Deeds said talking to couples is the best way to determine a vacation that is right for them.

"We save them time and money by being able to compare all their options," Deeds said. "If there's something you have a special interest in, we can make that work."

Deeds said the most popular international travel option after the Caribbean and Mexico is Europe. She said travelers should avoid the summer months because there are more tourists and it is hotter.

"When [people] go to Europe, they don't go to one city and stay; they're usually traveling around during the week or two weeks they've got to spend," Deeds said. "I think you get the better value for your money and good weather if you can go in April or May or the fall months."

EARMARKS | Boyda, Moore reveal earmark requests on Web sites

additional funds from industry partners, cooperative grants and private contributors, all of which already contribute much to the BRI.

"The value it's provided us has been wonderful," Rusk said.

Peterson said K-State has to accept whatever funding it receives from Congress and possibly look for funding somewhere else. According to Boyda's and Rep. Dennis Moore's Web site, K-State requested almost $28 million in funding, almost twice the amount Peterson projected K-State received. This does not include earmarks from Reps. Jerry Moran and Todd Tiahrt, and Sens. Pat Roberts and Sam Brownback, who are both K-State alumni.

Boyda said the incongruity of earmarks is because of a lack of transparency. Earmarks are not monitored and are usually added to bills that are guaranteed to pass.

Boyda said this allows legislators to withhold reasons for questionable earmarks from their constituents and other members of Congress.

"They don't want to take all the questions and criticisms that come," she said. "And my view is if you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen."

Boyda said the easiest solution to a lack of transparency is forcing all members of Congress to post every earmark they introduce, not just the ones that pass.

Boyda said she was called a maverick two years ago when she announced she would post earmark requests online, but fellow Kansas Democratic representative Dennis Moore, as well as other legislators, soon followed suit.

"The crazy thing is four members of Congress in Kansas, two in the House and two in the Senate, still haven't," she said.

Since Democrats took control of Congress in 2006, Boyda said earmarks have gone down one-third from the previous Congress. But according to Taxpayers for Common Sense, a federal budget watchdog organization, more than $18 billion worth of earmarks were approved in Congressional bills last year.

This amount is still too high, according to most Congress members and many U.S. citizens. Some legislators, including probable Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain, have vowed to not introduce any earmarks.

Boyda said this number

HOW THEY ARE INTRODUCED?

Members of Congress request that earmarks be placed in particular bills. The language used is often written by lobbyists who have been hired to obtain the federal funding for a project from a particular legislator. Earmarks are often slipped into conference committee reports after the differing bills have passed one of the two legislative chambers.

WHY THEY ARE IMPORTANT?

They provide a way for members of Congress to secure funds for important projects that they may have better knowledge about than others from outside of their district. They can also help a member bring jobs to their district. Earmarks also help members get re-elected.

it's there. I'm physically in shape, and I know I'm ready to jump that high if I can put it all together."

Sellers said he will wait to enjoy the award because he is focused on the NCAA Championships, which are March 14 and 15 in Fayetteville, Ark. There, he will look to improve his jumps and compete for a national championship.

Winning a performer of the year award shows Sellers can perform on a big stage, like the NCAA Championships, his coach said.

"One, it confirms that he is very good and two, it confirms that when the lights come on he performs at a high level," Rovelto said.

Before Sellers' pair of awards, the last Wildcat to be crowned performer of the year was Austra Skujyte, who won the award in the 2002 outdoor season for her performance in the heptathlon.

anger," she stated in her poem.

K-State student, Jo Merrifield, was one of the many people who came to the event. Merrifield, a senior in Apparel and Textiles, initially came to the event because of a class assignment, but gained a lot and admired Chrystos' ability and ambition to discuss different issues in an open manner, she said.

"It's actually kind of refreshing," she mentioned. "She is able to discuss words openly and she's not afraid of anything-I definitely like that."

K-State professor, Lisa Tatonetti, was the coordinator of the event and wanted to bring Chrystos because of the impact on society her work has made and how her work coincides with the programming of the conference, she said.

The conference entitled "Extremism and Excluded Middle," March 6-8 includes the binaries that are happening in the United States such as politics, religion and gender, she said.

Tatonetti, professor in the English and American Ethnic Studies, said Chrystos is seen often as being angry in the way her work as a poet. Tatonetti uses Chrystos' poetry in her classes because it has a great influence on her students, she noted.

She also stressed the importance of having someone like Chrystos who speaks openly about politics and critiques it in an way that relates to the academia world.

"We need that in Kansas," Tatonetti said. "I think that we live in a bit of a scary age where we're fresh in the patriot act and free speech is in danger."

DRESS | Green is an absolute requirement

hazy for all of us.

6. Don't be afraid to dress up. What's a holiday without a little tacky detailing? Spray paint or temporarily dye your hair green, paint your nails with shamrocks or get a pot-o-gold temporarily tattooed on your shoulder. Invest in some bobble-ear headbands or even a leprechaun hat. Be creative, and just have fun.

7. Last but certainly not least, wear green. Anyone who stumbles into Aggieville on Saturday or the 17th without a hint of the hue should be ashamed of themselves. And contrary to what some people think, simply having green eyes is not enough. You might end up pretty bruised from all the pinches and punches you'll be receiving from friends and complete strangers.

So respect good ol' St. Pat, represent the nation that has brought us Colin Farrell, U2 and Guinness and dress responsibly.

K-State greeks, dance groups perform at MHS 'Unity' show

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the grand finale, lights and smoke attracted the audience's attention to the entrance of the auditorium as Manhattan High School's step team started its performance.

A celebration of dance and step brought members of the community together through MHS and Black Student Union's "Unity in the Community" event Friday night at the MHS West Campus.

The Fort Riley dance group Girls With a Future opened with a tribute to U.S. soldiers.

The women of Delta Sigma Theta and Alpha Kappa Alpha followed, incorporating stepping into skits that put emphasis on the historical background of the sororities.

"Having the greeks from K-State participate gives the show more 'umph,'" said Jasmine Cook, president of MHS's BSU and captain of the step team at MHS. Alpha Phi Alpha members showed their support with a step-routine performance and an imitation of a scene from "You Got Served" to hype up the audience.

dios changed the event's vibe. They came from Junction City to support the show's "Unity in the Community" theme.

After a 10-minute intermission, the show continued as host Randy Myles paid a tribute to all those who helped make the show possible, including many of K-State's greeks.

"Without the greeks, there would be no step show," Myles said.

Manhattan High School's BSU finished with a performance in their red letter jackets as members introduced themselves in a step routine. The skit turned into a rival male versus female performance and finished as both collaborated to step and dance in unison.

The event ended with a comedic event promoting "BSU juice," the group's after-show social.

"The social is an activity to socialize and have fun," said Myles, MHS' BSU sponsor and step master.

The high school's BSU show originally started in February 2005 because BSU did not have an annual event, Myles said. It is

Fake Patty's brings early morning drinkers to Aggieville

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Because many K-State students will be gone during Spring Break, a collection of bars chose to celebrate St. Patrick's Day a week early.

Some "Fake St. Patty's Day" parties took advantage of the morning, lining up as early as 8:30 on Saturday, just to be the first in the bars to order their drinks. So Long Saloon even offered breakfast for hungry partiers.

At times, it became difficult to tell whether the Aggieville patrons were more excited about the green beer they were drinking or the cartloads of multi-colored beads that were being tossed out.

While most people go out to Aggieville, it is after the sun has gone down and it is socially acceptable to be drinking. The darkness of night makes it difficult to be safely aware of surroundings and safety.

Carly Wagner, senior in education and modern languages, said she liked "Fake Patty's Day" for that very reason; it was easier to see the drunks and what they were doing.

"I think the drunk people during the day are funnier than drunk people at night because they do funny things like sing in the street, yell at people and dance," Wagner said.

As the day wore on and Aggieville-goers consumed more drinks, the early risers began to lose steam and regurgitate more than a bit of the alcohol they were so eager to consume.

"I love St. Patty's Day," said one inebriated woman who described herself only as a "happy drinker."

There were many who ended up like this, stumbling around attempting to find the rest of their party and to get back into the bars.

"Everyone was drunk, but everyone was in a really good mood," said Anna Lewis, junior in electronic journalism and waitress at So Long Saloon.

Wheelchair team competes against K-State athletes

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Wheelhaws, a wheelchair basketball team based in Topeka, visited the Peters Recreation Complex to raise awareness for disabled athletes Saturday afternoon.

The wheelchair basketball game was the final event in "K-State for All" disability awareness week March 2-8.

Ray Petty, a 58-year-old who has been with the team for about 18 years, led the Wheelhaws. He said playing wheelchair basketball for new people who might come out and try it is his favorite aspect of their public events.

"Somebody knows somebody's cousin who might give it a try," Petty said. "That's the kind of things that happen."

Another player, Josh Rouff, a 13-year-old, said he likes to show people the difficulty involved in wheelchair sports.

Petty said it is important to get younger players interested to organize a junior Wheelhaws team.

The Wheelhaws only brought six players to the game but have more than 10 players on the team.

The camaraderie and friendship of the teammates is what draws many of the first-time players back to the team, said Jarvis

Man arrested for battery, aggravated burglary after breaking into ex's home

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was arrested and confined for aggravated burglary and battery after allegedly breaking into his ex-girlfriend's house and taking her dog at about 2 a.m. Friday, according to a police report.

Scott Edgar Backman, 39, of Waterville, Kan., was arrested after breaking into the residence of the victim, 23.

According to the report, Backman approached the victim's residence, 302 S. Main St., and demanded entry. Backman thought the victim was with another person in the residence, according to the report, but she said she was not.

The victim did not open the door, so Backman went to the back door of the residence and tried to force it open, but was unsuccessful. He then returned to the front of the house and opened the front door, which was unlocked, according to the report.

Backman entered the victim's residence, ripped the victim's shirt off, and took her 3-year-old female pug after she had called the police.

He left the residence before police arrived. Police found and arrested Backman at about 3:45 a.m. that day, according to the report.

No injuries were reported. The damages amounted to $500, including $200 for the theft of the dog and the $300 worth of damage to the back door and frame, according to the report. Backman's bond was set at $2,000.

TUESDAY 1989: 'COPS' PREMIERS ON FOX

Reality-based TV show "COPS" was first broadcast nationally on this day in 1989 on the Fox network. Production crews rode with real patrol officers and filmed whatever crime and violence occurred on the ride.

Fledgling network Fox took the show after the larger networks passed on it.

FRIDAY 1879: THEORIST EINSTEIN BORN

On March 14, 1879, Albert Einstein is born, the son of a Jewish electrical engineer in Ulm, Germany. Einstein's theories of special and general relativity drastically altered man's view of the universe, and his work in particle and energy theory helped make possible quantum mechanics and, ultimately, the atomic bomb.

Chef gives students insight on different flavors, meats of Latin food

By Rebecca Perez

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When people think about Latin food, they often think about spicy, Mexican food, but there are more flavors and regions included, said chef Taj Marie.

Marie, who has worked with Food Network personality Rachael Ray, was the chef and lecturer for the fourth annual Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Management and Dietetics culinary enhancement student workshop that took place Friday.

Marie covered cuisine from Mexico, Cuba, Jamaica, Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

AUTHENTIC MEXICAN COOKING

Marie said Americans often think Mexican food is actually Tex-Mex. She said beans and corn were the staples of Mexican cooking, and pork and chicken are the main meat sources in Mexico, not beef, which is what is usually found in Tex-Mex.

Marie also said Mexico has many different regions, and each region has its own recipes and way of cooking dishes. The one constant in Mexico is the use of spices.

She introduced the students to the different types of chiles. She described their heat and flavor and then explained how to work with dried chiles.

Once the audience knew how to work with dried chiles, she gave a demonstration making as nacho-chili paste that was used to make a red enchilada sauce and a red molé sauce. The audience was given samples of the chicken molé, which led to a comment from a student about the lack of cheese in the Mexican dishes.

Marie said traditional Mexican food does not use much cheese. Cheese is more of a garnish than a staple of the dish. What most people think of as enchiladas is more like a quesadilla, she said.

DIVERSIFIED FLAVORS OF THE CARIBBEAN

After a short break, Marie introduced Caribbean food.

She started with a brief geography lesson of the Caribbean that focused on Cuba, Jamaica, Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico. She explained there are almost a thousand islands in the Caribbean, but these were the main countries. She chose to focus on Cuba and Jamaica for her demonstrations.

She explained the foods in the Caribbean were influenced by Spaniards, Africans, Chinese and the indigenous populations. Many of the staples of the Caribbean like taro root, plantains and yuca came from the African people who were brought over to work the sugar cane plantations. The Europeans introduced sugarcane. The Chinese who came over to the islands brought with them ginger, coconut milk and turmeric.

Seafood, chicken and goat are the primary meat sources in the islands, but pork is becoming more common, Marie said. She also said that what is eaten is dictated by what is imported.

During the hands-on part of the workshop, Emily Nelson, senior in public health nutrition and dietetics; Courtney Albers, senior in dietetics; and Lawrence Simonson, senior in dietetics; work on their salsa while getting tips from instructor Taj Marie.

Joslyn Brown

She made a Cuban black bean soup and Jamaican jerked porkloin. The scent from the jerked pork as it was grilled wafted over the crowd. Luckily for the audience, it was time for lunch.

Shaakira Grant, senior in hotel and restaurant management, was born in Trinidad, so she was familiar with Caribbean cuisine. Grant's constant refrain while working on the different items was, "It needs more salt."

The Derby Dining facility recreated Marie's recipes. They made her roasted tomato salsa, simple red enchiladas with corn and zucchini, tamarind-ginger punch, grilled jerk spiced pork tenderloin, Cuban black bean soup and grilled steak with chimichurri.

Stepping lightly

'Going green' can be expensive; walking, recycling more effective

Kermit the Frog said it best: "It ain't easy bein' green."

While it would make sense to simplify our lives in an effort to end global warming, the technologies required to tackle our growing global quandary only further complicate our daily routines.

For this reason, "going green" — in terms of adapting to concepts like biofuels, installing solar panels and driving hybrid cars — is simply impractical for college students. According to the Green Options Web site, college students actively are taking on their roles as environmentally proactive members of society. The site lists walking, eating organic and local foods, recycling and reusing goods, and purchasing or even making cleaning products as ways students are contributing to a healthier environment. And yes, selling your old studio table on Facebook.com counts. All these options can be done for anywhere from no cost up to about $10, whereas the average hybrid car can set you back about a cool $20,000.

The Union of Concerned Scientists share on its Web site that there are 10 steps to combating global warming. They include buying Energy Star appliances (a modest refrigerator will cost about $1,000 at Lowe's), making your next car a hybrid, purchasing "good wood" and lobbying state legislators to alert them of the effects of global warming.

Few people — namely college students — can afford to replace all their vehicles and appliances, but scientists and government officials present few other options. They make these seem so do-or-die that people are caught in a catch-22 between their pocketbooks and making a small impact on our environment.

Mitch Stimers, graduate student in geography, said a future with global warming is real, and already, the average amounts of precipitation are likely to decrease in areas.

"The intensity at which precipitation events occur is likely to increase, which will increase human vulnerability to flood events. Other [effects] would include adverse effects on crop production, and the loss of coastal land due to sea-level rise," he said.

This winter's above-average snowfall should ring a bell, but the problem is countering these negative effects.

If professionals aren't sure of the best way to address environmental threats, what is the common man supposed to do? And why are we rushing into a schizophrenia of solutions?

Biofuels will create a dangerous competition between using crops as food or fuel. Various methods of power like geothermal and nuclear merely create new hazards for our world. Taxing people based on their collective energy consumption is a piece of legislation that easily could be fought over in Congress for the next five years.

Researchers, inventors and legislators are taking the fire-fighting approach to stopping global warming. The proposed solutions only postpone damage when they need to be completely eliminated from our world. What happens when we run out of space to plant enough corn for ethanol? Our best bet is to cap the effects on global warming.

"The best thing government and industry can do right now is continue to look for solutions that will reduce the amount of carbon dioxide being placed in the atmosphere while minimizing the effect on national and global economies," Stimers said.

Economically, he is referring to the credits — or the allotted amounts of carbon emissions for international businesses often traded and sold between markets — that organizations like the United Nations use to regulate worldwide emissions in hopes of reducing the greenhouse effect.

"The U.S. still hasn't signed the Kyoto Protocol, which will make it impossible for U.S.-based companies to become certified by the United Nations to trade carbon credits on the global market," Stimers said.

Global warming is an earth issue, not just an American one, and we should be playing nicely with the other countries.

The best solution for 2008 is proactivity.

The average person is simply afraid of complex changes they will never truly understand. Subtle changes to our daily habits and lifestyles are the best and most measurable changes. They can do more good and will make people feel better about their "environmental footprint."

One is more likely to find gratification in taking shorter showers and walking to campus every few days instead of opening a dryer with an Energy Star sticker on it.

These ideas are easier and more effective. They will give us a chance to stop and smell the roses and save the ozone layer for one more day.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

There's nothing wrong with you. The Beatles and Pink Floyd are awful.

Moore Hall can't compete with Goodnow. GS, baby.

Barack Obama saw his shadow. Seven more weeks of primaries.

To the young guy that works in that little grocery store, ALDI: Call me.

To the Sigma Chi sitting alone at lunch at the Union: Huh. I wonder why?

Some guy just drove through campus blaring "Barbie Girl," and I thought for a minute that I was in Lawrence.

Why is it the only good-looking girls you see in the engineering complex work at the coffee shop?

Does Willie the Wildcat wear boxers or briefs?

I love you, little mangy squirrel.

The Collegian Web site takes me to the Royal Purple yearbook Web site. Yeah, you guys might want to fix that.

Has anybody else on campus noticed that all the squirrels are balding?

To the person who doesn't like the Beatles: There's seriously something wrong with you. I challenge you to listen to "Yellow Submarine" or "I am the Walrus" and not be entertained.

To all gals reading the Fourum: Would you date a guy if he had Asperger's syndrome, or at least if you knew he had Asperger's?

Until I saw the headline today, I forgot that we even had a girls' basketball team.

The seventh floor misses you, Kyle.

Moore 7: That's what she said.

I wish I was an Oscar Mayer wiener.

To the guys who roll through campus on Fridays and just about every other day blaring "Call on Me" at the highest volume ever: You pretty much make my week.

Schools focus more on tests than retaining quality teachers

Elementary-school students are being paid for how well they do on standardized tests, according to an article in The New York Times on Wednesday.

The har-binger of this movement is in New York City's public school system, the largest system in the nation, in which more than 200 schools are experimenting with this concept.

The idea is to provide an incentive for students to excel on standardized tests, thereby improving the overall test scores of the schools. Even teachers get a bonus if their students perform well.

According to the Times article, Roland G. Fryer, the Harvard economist who created the program, said he is aware it is not the panacea for education, but it is worth a try.

"I'm not saying I know this is going to fix everything,"

Fryer said in the article, "but I am saying it's worth trying. What we need to try to do is start that spark."

This money keeps children off the street and in the classroom. If the students show significant improvement on state tests at Public School 188, the teachers will receive a $3,000 bonus, according to the article.

"We're in competition with the streets," said Virginia Connelly, principal of Junior High School 123, in the Times article. "They can go out there and make $50 illegally any day of the week. We have to do something to compete with that."

As great as this incentive of paying children for their performance on tests might be, there is a problem with all these standardized tests schools are making children take.

Education is supposed to make the world personal. That is what teachers do — they make education personal, and they bring it to life. But lately, teachers have been hard to keep around.

According to a recent article in Time magazine, between one-fourth and one-third of new teachers quit within the first three years on the job. Teachers are becoming impatient with the bureaucratic tangle that is producing poor pay for a noble profession.

Thomas Carroll, president of the National Commission on Teaching and America's Future, said hiring new teachers is "like filling a bucket with a huge hole in the bottom," according to the Time magazine article. Many teachers are tired of living from paycheck to paycheck.

Inadequate salaries is one reason good teachers are difficult to find. Teaching, as Time put it, is "a profession known for low pay [and] low status" in a "soul-crushing bureaucracy." Nevertheless, research suggests that a good teacher is vital, more important "than class size, the dollars spent per student or the quality of textbooks and materials."

Today, we are too caught up in the means of educating today's youth. With our standardized tests, we are forgetting the purpose of education: not to teach children how to earn a living but how to create a life. Better tests are not going to make children smarter. Instead, it is teachers' efforts that will save students from failing.

Social critic Neil Postman, in his book "The End of Education," wrote, "Public education does not serve the public. It creates a public." Teachers are a primary part in that creation, not tests.

Instead of being worried about numbers on test scores meeting national standards for acts like No Child Left Behind or focusing on the means behind education, we need to focus more on keeping teachers around to teach and inspire students.

They are one of the significant forces for purpose in students' lives, and though it would require serious revision of many methods, the teaching profession is due for significant improvement.

Bands entertain 'Harry Potter' fans with wizard rock, quirky humor

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An unusual parade of witches, wizards, muggles and wizard rock greeted individuals who entered the K-State Student Union Saturday night.

Children's and Adolescent Literature Community sponsored the Hallows and Horcruxes Ball, a wizard rock concert for literacy.

The Union Ballroom was festooned with streamers and four tapestries designated to the individual Hogwarts' houses, where the "Harry Potter" characters attended school - H for Hufflepuff, G for Gryffindor, R for Ravenclaw and S for Slytherin.

Rachel Parkin, co-president of ChALC, said there were more than 200 individuals in attendance Saturday night. Students adorned in wizard dress robes and even Voldemort, Potter's antagonist, showed up for the occasion.

As female duet The Moaning Myrtles belted out one of its "bathroom-humor" tunes, the audience clapped, danced and participated in a humorous sway to the music.

"I think it's really great," said Leschia McElhaney, junior in psychology and anthropology. "It's better than I expected. A lot of the bands seem to have a really quirky sense of humor."

Other bands that performed included Ginny and The Heartbreakers, Ministry of Magic, The Mudbloods, The Parselmouths and The Remus Lupins.

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Oklahoma wizard band Ginny and The Heartbreakers play "I have red hair" at the Hallows and Horcruxes ball and concert Saturday night in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Upon entering, young witches and wizards were given raffle tickets for book drawings that took place during the evening. Several of the books were signed by members of participating bands. The music was what first inspired ChALC members to have a "Harry Potter"-themed event.

"When I saw four of the bands last summer at the Prophecy 2007 'Harry Potter' Conference, I thought it would be fun to bring some of them here and raise money for literacy," said Karin Westman, ChALC faculty adviser. McElhaney and friends purchased the Ministry of Magic CD as soon as the band's performance concluded.

"I had heard of them, but I hadn't heard their music," McElhaney said. "[I will probably follow their career] now that I've heard them."

ChALC only has been around for about a year and a half, and this is the organization's first fund-raising event of this kind, Westman said. All the proceeds from the concert will be donated to First Book, a nonprofit organization providing disadvantaged children with new books.

"I think that for being a young organization, we have a lot of things we do. We're young and active," Parkin said. "ChALC is essentially a literacy group. We do anything we can to support literature, especially using children's books."

K-State undergraduates included in 13th-annual Research Forum display

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Erin Jurand has researched for more than one year, and she finally had the chance to show off her findings Friday in the K-State Student Union.

More than 30 graduate and undergraduate students presented their research-project findings at the 13th-annual K-State Research Forum on the third floor of the Union. The K-State Graduate Student Council was host to the Forum, and judges reviewed the presentations and selected the top-three winners in each category.

"This is a great forum for students to present their research in a professional and respectable way," Jurand said. "It's also helpful to get feedback from the judges' rubrics for future reference."

Jurand, graduate student in curriculum and instruction, presented the findings from her dissertation research project. Her study was titled "Summer writing camp increases scores: A case study in visualization embedded in the writing process," and Jurand spent time explaining her reason for conducting the study.

"I proposed this one year ago, and I collected data for a while and then had to write my proposal," she said. "It definitely takes a lot of work, so it's exciting to be able to show it off and tell people about what I've been working on. Some peoples' families even come up just to see their work."

The forum consisted of several rooms of poster displays and oral presentations, as well as refreshments for guests. The research topics varied from agriculture to chemistry and medical subjects like Alzheimer's disease.

Shiva Garimella, graduate student in grain science and president-elect of the Graduate Student Council, said this also was the first year for the forum's name-change. Formerly known as the Graduate Research Forum, the name was changed to the K-State Research Forum to be more inclusive for undergraduates. Garimella, who also served as chairman of the forum, said he was impressed by the undergraduates' oral presentations.

"[The undergraduates] have a lot of talent - we really welcome their addition to the forum," he said. "Next time, we hope to gain even wider acceptance and visibility for them."

Garimella also said the winners selected by the forum judges were awarded $150, $100 and $75 Union gift-card prizes for their research.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Team falls to No. 46 Lobos

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Steve Bietau was not pleased with the outcome of Saturday's tennis match against No. 46 New Mexico.

"I just don't think we played very well," he said. "I'm not sure if I was hoping or expecting any differences from the KU match, but if anything, it turned out to be more of the same."

The No. 67 K-State tennis team fell to the Lobos, 5-2, on Saturday at Ahearn Field House. The loss extended the Wildcats' losing streak to five matches, and continued the free fall that has taken place since K-State's best start since 1989, now below a .500 winning percentage.

Once again, K-State was in competition for the doubles point until the end.

In the No. 3 doubles match, Maria Sotirchos and Mackenzie White defeated sophomore Natasha Vieira and freshman Vanessa Cottin, 8-3.

K-State countered with senior Viviana Yrureta and freshman Antea Huljev's 9-7 win over Victoria Tessmar and Jennifer Ryba. The win pushed Yrureta and Huljev's record to 8-7 this spring.

The doubles point came down to the No. 1 singles match, junior Katerina Kudlackova and senior Olga Klimova went to extra points against Lucy Scott and Sandra Zmak, before the Lobos' duo pulled out the win, 9-8 (7-2).

In singles play, Huljev and Yrureta provided the Wildcats' only wins. Yrureta topped Ola Abu-Zekry, 6-1, 0-6, 6-2.

The win pushed her record to 11-9 this season, and 5-3 at the No. 1 spot in the spring. Huljev beat White, 6-3, 0-6, 6-4; and pushed her to 6-3 for the spring season. Yrureta said she was pleased with her performances in doubles and singles play.

"Those were tough ones," she said. "In doubles, we were down, and we were able to pull it out, it was a good win. In singles, it was another tough match. [Abu-Zekry] was a good player. I played against her last year and lost, so I was glad I won."

The Lobos won the remainder of the singles matches. Zmak topped Kudlackova, 6-1, 7-6 (3).

Emma Hayman defeated Cottin, 6-2, 6-4. Ryba bested Vieira, 6-4, 6-3, and Tessmar won over Klimova, 2-6, 6-2, 6-2.

Bietau said he thought the team did not play much to its strengths.

"Definitely at No. 1 doubles, definitely not at No. 3 doubles too – in singles, it was about one-third of the line-up," he said.

Pauline Guemas was a notable absence in the line-up.

The freshman from St. Fort, France, had recently teamed with Cottin at the No. 3 doubles position, and the duo had posted a 4-6 record.

Instead, Guemas was benched and Vieira teamed with Cottin.

Bietau said it was the result of Guemas' "poor practicing this week."

Yrureta took the loss in stride.

"I think we played our first matches pretty good this year," she said. "[New Mexico] is a little tougher, and we are playing a little harder teams now. I think we're doing good, but we're not quite there yet."

"Our doubles are pretty good; we nearly won the doubles point today and did against KU. Singles is also going pretty good."

The Wildcats will travel to Missouri on Friday and Colorado on March 16.

K-State overcomes 2nd-half run to get 10th conference win

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIANCoach Frank Martin yells out a play during the Wildcats' 73-69 victory over Iowa State on Saturday in Ames, Iowa.

AMES, Iowa – Relief was on Frank Martin's face and in his words following the 73-69 victory over Iowa State on Saturday.

"Last year, we went into the Big 12 Tournament with unbelievable pressure to win to extend our season," Martin said. "We're not going in there with that kind of pressure this year. We can go in there, relax, enjoy it and compete our hearts out to be in the Sunday [championship] game."

K-State (20-10, 10-6 Big 12 Conference) clinched the No. 3 seed in the Big 12 Tournament – and possibly an NCAA Tournament bid – with Saturday's win. K-State senior guard Clint Stewart knocked down a three to start the game, and K-State led by 14 later on. With K-State only having a 2-5 Big 12 road record, Martin said his team was cautious.

"I think it's because some of the lack of success on the road in the last month," he said. "I think we became a little tentative, both on offense and defense. We had breakdowns that weren't physical mistakes but mental mistakes."

The Wildcats led by nine at half, but Iowa State (14-17, 4-12 Big 12) never let up on the Wildcats, getting as close as three multiple times and cutting the lead to two with two seconds left after senior guard Blake Young fouled freshman guard Diante Garrett in three-point range before he had a chance to get a shot up.

"That's why seniors are so important on a basketball team," Martin said. "That means – on that last possession, we're up two, Bill misses a free throw – we're in a full-court man [to-man defense]. We made them cut to their baseline to catch the ball and to have them dribble the ball the length of the court takes seven seconds off the clock."

Garrett hit the first shot and missed the second, which freshman forward Michael Beasley snatched out of mid-air to seal the victory. Beasley was fouled by senior center Jiri Hubalek and made the two free throws to send the Wildcats to the all-important 20-win, 10-conference-win platform.

"We're a good team," Martin said. "We're a battle-tested team. You think about it, you lose four in a row, a lot of teams, their spirits get broken. We come back home and figure out a way to win. We go on the road, where we haven't had a win recently, and figured out how to stay together."

Beasley missed the double-double mark by one rebound, the first time he has not had one since the Jan. 30 game against Kansas. He finished with 15 points and nine rebounds. The leading scorer for K-State was freshman guard

Distance medley relay competes before nationals

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With many of the track and field athletes resting for next weekend's NCAA Championships, Wildcats competing this weekend were few and far between.

The members of the distance medley relay team traveled to South Bend, Ind., to run in Notre Dame's Alex Wilson Invitational. The squad – seniors, Morgan Bonds and Marny-ka Honeycutt, junior Liliani Mendez and sophomore Beverly Ramos – finished third in the event, posting a time of 11:15.10. The team's time in the relay met the NCAA provisional qualifying mark by nearly 15 seconds.

This weekend provided the first opportunity for the relay team to run together. Coach Cliff Rovelto said the squad's time would rank them around 15th in the nation but might not earn a spot at the NCAA championship meet.

Ramos set a personal best in the 1-mile run, finishing in 4:44.10 and cutting more than 10 seconds off her previous best time. She finished in 10th place and achieved the NCAA provisional qualifying mark.

Honeycutt ran to a fifth-place finish in the 200-meter dash with a time of 24.99.

The only other Wildcat in action over the weekend was senior Laci Heller, who placed second in the weight throw at the ISU Last Chance in Ames, Iowa. Heller unleashed a throw of 66-7, which was the second best of her career and an NCAA provisional qualifying mark.

Rovelto said Heller competed this weekend to try to secure a spot in the

Wildcats rally to win series over Le Moyne

By Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Staying home over the weekend proved to be just what the K-State baseball team needed as it won its first series of the 2008 campaign. The Wildcats took three games out of four from the Le Moyne Dolphins, with their home-field advantage.

The Wildcats took one of two on Saturday but swept Le Moyne in the Sunday double-header.

K-State (6-6) suffered an early error by junior third baseman Nate Tenbrink, which proved costly for K-State in the first game of the four-game set. Junior pitcher Ben Hornbeck got hit for four early unearned runs in the second inning. The Le Moyne scoring was highlighted by a two-out, three-run homer in the Dolphins half of the second.

K-State tried to fight its way back into the game as the Wildcats scored a combined three runs in the next two innings. The Wildcats plated a pair in the second and got a solo homer by junior shortstop Drew Biery in the third.

The one-run deficit was the closest K-State would get the rest of the game as Le Moyne added single runs in the fourth and fifth innings. The Dolphins added another pair of runs in the ninth to solidify the 8-3 victory.

The nightcap of the first day might have been the most exciting game the Wildcats have played so far this season, as K-State won in an 11-inning thriller, 11-10.

The Wildcats rallied from six runs down in the bottom of the ninth to send the game into extra innings. The game would have ended in the last inning on a line drive off the bat of Derek Bunker, but a diving catch by Dolphins left fielder Chris Edmondson saved the day, for the moment.

Maintain healthy skin during harsh winter months

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's no escaping a bone-chilling Kansas winter, and there's no escaping its effect on skin. Freezing temperatures, dry air and whipping wind can take a serious toll, leaving it pasty and cracked, but not to worry. There are plenty of tricks and remedies to create and give the illusion of healthy, glowing skin.

STAY SMOOTH

All-around healthy, beautiful skin always starts with moisture, said Brenda Williams, nurse manager for Advanced Dermatology. She said because of drier air and lower humidity in the winter seasons, skin is prone to become dry and cracked. Many have furnaces running constantly this time of year, and Williams said that can affect skin also.

To stay soft and healthy, she recommended moisturizing at least once a day with an unscented moisturizer like Cetaphil and cleansing with a mild, unscented soap like Dove Unscented.

"[Moisturizing] is most effective when you put it on right when you get out of the shower," Williams said. "This works best because your skin will still be damp."

COLOR ME BRONZE

It's almost impossible to stop the onsets of pale skin during a winter in the Midwest unless you do it artificially. For those who prefer a year-round, beachy look, there are plenty of options.

The three most popular ways to achieve tanned skin during the winter are beds, spray-ons and tinted lotions.

Williams said moisturizing is the building block for good-looking skin and to get the best results when using a tanning bed, Sara Rauch, owner of Planet Beach in Manhattan, said moisture is key. Hydrated skin prepares it for the UV-rays and helps the tan last longer, she said.

When choosing to tan in a bed, Rauch said customers have two options — they might use a lay-down or stand-up bed. Beds typically differ in UV strength and length.

"The lay down, depending on what bed you use," she said, "lasts between 12 and 20 minutes, and the stand up is actually eight minutes. The stand-up fully covers you so you get an all-around coverage tan and is our most intense bed."

Rauch said there also are lotions available to maximize the tanning experience. For example, accelerator lotions are applied just before going into the bed to help hydrate and prolong the tan, she said. There also are tingle lotions, which bring the melanin closer to the surface of the skin for a faster tan.

"It does make you hot and make you red for about an hour after you use it," she said, "but it's not a burn."

One alternative option that still gives the skin a bronzed tan without the UV rays is a spray-on, or mist, tan. This tan, Rauch said, lasts about five to seven days and gives an instant, natural-looking color. She said customers should always exfoliate, shave and moisturize before the tan to prolong its glow.

The second option is a tinted lotion. Williams said she has seen patients who have used a tinted lotion, and she said these products are perfectly safe for the skin. The tinted lotions are moisturizers with an artificial coloring in them, she said. This color, however, might wash off if not regularly applied.

MAKE IT UP

After hydrating and getting a tan, the finishing touch for many women, and occasionally men, is to apply bronzing makeup. However, when used too generously, these bronzers can make the face orange or a different color from the body.

To avoid this unsightly situation, Karline Jorgensen, studio manager of Merle Normal Cosmetics in Manhattan Town Center Mall, said to try mineral powder.

"Mineral powder is something that works and is really popular right now, because a true mineral makeup just has natural ingredients, free of preservatives and fragrance," Jorgensen said. "So instead of having a matte finish, a luminous powder gives you the natural glow of how skin would look without any makeup on it."

Jorgensen said this powder can be worn from sheer to full coverage — whatever looks most natural on you.

Another sun-kissed trick is to apply bronzer, she said, but not all over the face. This is how your head ends up looking mismatched to your body. Jorgensen said to pick a hue closer to your skin tone, start with light coverage and build the color to avoid applying too much. Next, she said to use bronzer only where the sun naturally hits the face — forehead, nose, chin and cheekbone.

"It will keep you looking really fresh," she said.

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Columnist discusses fixations, history, risks of oral sex

The act of sticking objects in one's mouth is one many people enjoy. Throughout life, we might have tasted grass or dirt and maybe even tried a worm or a couple of ants. Then our mama's voice echoes across the backyard, "Get that out of your mouth, you don't know where it's been!"

Needless to say, oral sex is nothing new, and could serve as some people's adult answer to the urge to put foreign objects in their mouths. I would bet you could look at any time period and see that couples were experimenting with sticking this and that into their mouths — Cleopatra and Mark Antony playing swallow the scorpion or Arthur sampling Guinevere's round table.

According to a 2002 study by the National Center for Health Statistics, 90.1 percent of men and 88.3 percent of women have engaged in heterosexual oral sex. The issue arising in today's society is that it seems oral sex has become the diet plan to keep one's "true virginity." The conversation seems to be: "Are you sexually active?" "Oh! No, I'm on the sex-light diet. I only give blow jobs." "Oh! Well you're looking fine there with your herpes!"

Basically, oral sex is sex. We don't call it "oral not sex," and like other sexual practices, it has inherent risks. Many sexually transmitted infections that you get in your nether regions can also rear their ugly heads in your mouth and throat.

Herpes hits most anywhere in the mouth region, and along with gonorrhea, can get in your throat. They represent the two most-common orally transmitted STIs. In the case of herpes, a traditional swab for a sore throat will not reveal that a virus is an issue. This is why it is important to be open with your doctor about your sexual practices. Chlamydia, HPV and syphilis also can be shared through oral sex. Though studies have been relatively inconclusive, it is still generally believed that one has a small chance of contracting HIV through oral sex. Finally, if you practice rimming (anal-oral contact) there is risk of many parasites being transferred, along with hepatitis A.

Is there a way to make oral sex safer? When looking at the wide variety of condoms, it is quite obvious that your vagina or anus are not able to taste the flavored ones. Condom companies make flavored condoms for oral-penile contact.

Think of it as reminiscent of a hot summer day with a cherry popsicle at hand. It is important to remember not to bite or even let your teeth snag the "popsicle" as a hole in the condom kind of defeats the purpose.

Less common are barriers made for oral-vaginal and oral-anal contact. However, dental dams — small latex sheets — are available. The basic idea is to place the barrier between your mouth and your partner's orifice— either a vagina or anus. These also come in a variety of flavors. However, a few potential issues are price and size. There is a solution — by cutting down a condom (or latex glove) you can make a larger and cheaper dental dam. Also, non-microwavable plastic wrap can be used.

In the end, oral sex, though fun, can be dangerous. Remember that just because someone's genitals look healthy doesn't mean they are, and any sexual activity is inherently risky.

Also, remember that you need to be ready both physically and emotionally before engaging in any sexual activity.

WEEKLY HOROSCOPE

AQUARIUS

(Jan. 21 - Feb. 19)

Plan a nice evening for two. Try to curb your habits, or you could find yourself in an awkward financial position. Lack of cash might be partly to blame for the problems at home.

PISCES

(Feb. 20 - March 20)

Romantic opportunities will be plentiful if you go out with friends. A day at the beach may satisfy the whole family. Invite friends in for a visit.

ARIES

(March 21 - April 20)

Your charm will be captivating. If you can mix business with pleasure much can be accomplished. You might find added popularity with those around you this week. It's time you let your true feelings out.

TAURUS

(April 21 - May 21)

Focus on forming business partnerships. You can beautify your surroundings by renovating or redecorating. Pleasure trips will promote new romantic encounters.

GEMINI

(May 22 - June 21)

Try to satisfy both of your needs. Don't push your opinions on others this week or you may find yourself in the doghouse. Find ways to mellow out. You can make money through real estate or by using your head when it comes to personal investments.

CANCER

(June 22 - July 22)

Your energetic nature and ability to initiate projects will add to your popularity. You must not lead someone on or show interest in them for the wrong reasons. You need more space for the whole family.

LEO

(July 23 - Aug. 22)

Unfortunately, your personal life may suffer from a lack spare time. You should regain some of your self esteem if you get involved in organizational functions. Look into making changes to your personal papers and don't neglect those bills that have been piling up.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23 - Sept. 23)

Talk to someone you trust if you need advice about broaching the subject. There might be a problem with a will or with an insurance policy. You will gain new friends if you get involved in environmental issues.

LIBRA

(Sept. 24 - Oct. 23)

You will have a problem holding on to your cash this week. Such over indulgence due to emotional upset will be your downfall. Try to understand their point of view.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 24 - Nov. 22)

You can accomplish the most if you travel for business purposes. Rewards, gifts, or money from investments or taxes can be expected. Expect to have problems with the ones you love.

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 23 - Dec. 21)

You should make sure that your personal papers are in order. You will meet new romantic partners if you get involved in seminars or travel. You can invest in profitable ventures.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)

Resistance leading to conflict will only make it twice as hard to turn the situation around. People trying to entice you to join in will be less than trustworthy. You can make adjustments in your domestic scene this week.

instruction on South American cuisine. She said South American food is less spicy, and the flavors are often less complex. Brazil has lots of European influence, Marie said.

She said Argentinians eat lots of protein-based foods like beef and often pair it with an herb and onion salsa, she said. Argentinians also eat a lot of rice, pasta and potatoes, and their traditional drink is a tea called mate.

Chile has a predominant wine culture, Marie said, and Chilean wines are becoming very common in the wine market. Seafood is the most common meat source in Chile, but the foods are very diverse, Marie said. Chilean empanadas differ by region.

Marie then demonstrated how to make a savory pork empanada. She emphasized to not overstuff the empanadas, and to make sure they are well sealed so the insides do not ooze out when cooked.

After the lecture was over, people who had signed up for a hands-on class got to make a tomato salsa, a tropical fruit salsa, shrimp ceviche and ham-and-cheese empanadas.

Matt Garcia, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said this was the second year he had attended the lecture series. He was encouraged to attend by his adviser, since he has an emphasis on food creation.

As everyone started to finish up, the students were told that anything not taken home would be thrown away. Everyone left the hands-on lesson with smiles on their faces and their hands full.

MEN | K-State to have 2 days off from practice

Jacob Pullen, who had 19 points, including 3-of-6 from three-point range.

"Every night, teams are thinking of strategies to stop Mike and Bill from scoring," Pullen said. "I'm just trying to show teams they can't depend on stopping Bill and Mike."

Iowa State's leading scorers were freshman forward Craig Brackins, who had 24 points; sophomore guard Wesley Johnson, who had 12 points; and Garrett, who had nine.

The Wildcats out-rebounded the Cyclones, 39-30.

"It's really unfortunate that this team can't quite kick that door in," Iowa State coach Greg McDermott said. "We are so close, and there are a lot of good things that happened this week. I'm not sure how many teams could have played with the heart my team played with, especially with the situation we were in."

K-State will have two days off from practice, Martin said.

They will play next at the Big 12 Tournament at 8:20 p.m. Friday at the Sprint Center in Kansas City, Mo., against the winner of the Thursday night game between No. 6-seed Texas A&M and No. 11-seed Iowa State. Martin said being the No. 3 seed carried significant weight.

"We won 10 conference games in the No. 1 RPI conference in the country," he said. "After going through a four-game losing streak in which we fought our rear ends off, to have the courage to stay together and go win in this building, which is so hard to win at, it's a credit to our kids."

BASEBALL | King scores 2nd game-winning RBI

K-State senior Daniel Edwards was able to record six straight outs in extra innings, setting the stage for the win in the bottom of the 11th. With the bases loaded and one out, freshman Jason King singled through the right side to drive in his second game-winning RBI.

On Sunday, K-State was able to pull out a 2-0 record over Le Moyne (3-10).

K-State was able to hold on for a 4-3 victory in Game One but then pummeled the Dolphins in the second game, winning easily, 10-1.

The Dolphins tied the first game up at three in the fifth inning, but the Wildcats came right back in the bottom of the inning and scored the winning run on a double down the left field line by Dane Yelovich. Edwards then came in and recorded his 17th save of his career — one shy of tying the school's career record of 18 held by David Johnson from 1994-97.

Walks and errors contributed to Le Moyne's bad showing in the final game. The Wildcats combined to score nine runs in the seventh and eighth innings, blowing out the Dolphins by nine runs.

national championships. She has not automatically qualified, but her provisional qualifying marks will likely earn her an invitation to the meet.

Many schools use this weekend as a last chance to qualify athletes for the NCAA championships, something Rovelto said he usually does not like doing.

"My philosophy is that if we don't get it done by the conference meet, one, we're probably not going to get it done, and two, if we do get it done, when we get to the national meet, we're going to be on empty," Rovelto said.

The Wildcats will know how many athletes will travel to the NCAA Championships when the list of qualifiers is released tonight at 9.

important for the community and young students to come together because the students will eventually take others' places in the community," Myles added.

Manhattan High's BSU has between 25 and 30 members, and anyone can be part of the organization, Cook said.

"BSU likes to be heard throughout the community," Cook said.

BSU has participated in recent events like the "Abolish the 'N-Word'" campaign to bring attention to the severity of the word and its everyday use has on the community, Myles said.

Throughout the year, many Greek organizations come out and teach the BSU new steps and help with their routine.

"Being on BSU gives us a taste of the frat and sorority life," Cook said.

Stirn, team representative and 11-year veteran of the Wheelhawks.

Stirn said he knew he would be returning to the Wheelhawks after his first practice.

"I just loved it," Stirn said. "It was good competition against other people who were equal in ability to you, and you can have fun doing it."

The team that played the Wheelhawks was made up of various university "celebrities." They were dubbed the "WheelCats" and included several players from the volleyball team and alumnae from the women's basketball team.

Jordy Nelson, former wide receiver for the K-State football team, made his way out to help raise awareness for the cause.

He said he had never done anything like wheelchair basketball before and that it was quite difficult.

"[The hardest part is] shooting without any legwork and not being able to control your wheelchair," Nelson said. "You know, you try to turn to shoot, and your entire wheelchair turns."

Though they had a hard time at it, Nelson and his teammates worked hard to compete with the Wheelhawks but were not very successful.

The game got off to a slow start with the Wheelhawks jumping out to a 10-0 lead in the first 10 minutes of the game.

The WheelCats' first points came courtesy of Lauren Mathewson, sophomore in business and libero for the women's volleyball team, 12 minutes into the game.

Mathewson said she didn't mind missing out on the Fake Patty's Day celebration Saturday and was excited for the interesting experience she was allowed to have.

"I thought it would be a cool experience. It is kind of humbling as well," Mathewson said. "You get a taste of their life."

When the final whistle blew, the WheelCats emerged victorious beating the Wheelhawks 48-42. That was, however, after the Wheelhawks gave the 'Cats 20 points at the half.

12 DUIs recorded over past weekend

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Police pulled over 21 motorists during a saturation patrol this weekend, according to a press release from the Riley County Police Department.

Of the 21 motorists pulled over, police issued 14 warnings and seven tickets to motorists for driving under the influence.

Overall that day, there were 12 DUIs, and some might not have been related to the saturation patrol, said Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the RCPD.

Moldrup also said the higher number of DUIs could possibly be contributed to the Fake Patty's Day festivities in Aggieville and the saturation checkpoint.

"Do I believe [the holiday] was part of the reason people were out drinking and we picked that weekend? Absolutely," Moldrup said. "That is one of the reasons that more people were out partying than on a normal weekend."

The patrol, which lasted from late Saturday night to early Sunday morning, was the first of five patrols the department will conduct throughout the year.

Moldrup said while officers have saturation patrols to catch drunk drivers, they do not usually come close to catching all the drunk drivers on the road.

"One of the reasons we do saturation patrols on any given night, especially weekends, is because studies have shown that there are a lot more intoxicated drivers out there than we come close to stopping."

Lisa Grossman, of Lawrence, Kan., said she began painting mostly Kansas landscapes when she moved to Kansas City, MO., and discovered the beauty of the Flint Hills. Many of her paintings are currently displayed in the Strecker-Nelson Gallery on Poyntz Ave.

Local exhibit shows Kansan's eye for home-state beauty

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Vast skies, vibrant sunsets, majestic mountains and winding river valleys painted in oil and watercolor adorn the Strecker-Nelson Gallery's walls in its newest exhibit, "Lisa Grossman Vernissage."

Lisa Grossman, artist and Lawrence resident, said she typically paints Kansas landscapes, prairies and hills, though she brought in river valley and mountain paintings from Western states for her show, which began Feb. 29 and will end April 12.

"Even though I do landscapes, which are typically traditional, I tease the line between traditional and more contemporary and abstract," Grossman said. "My work is accessible to people with varying tastes."

Grossman said she has painted her entire life but did not decide she wanted her emphasis to be on landscapes until she moved to Kansas City, MO., in 1988. She said she initially moved there to work for Hallmark but immediately noticed the Flint Hills, which inspired her to paint landscapes on location.

"I had never seen prairies before, and they made such a deep impression on me," Grossman said. "Discovering the wide space and skies wanted me to take the 'open air' approach, which means painting outdoors."

Grossman began her collegiate career at the Art Institute of Pittsburgh and finished her schooling at the University of Kansas. She said she went to school for commercial art and painted a variety of subjects but had always felt connected to landscape and the natural world. She said her personal growth as an artist lies in the process of finding her subject.

"Painting landscapes is just my personal way of saying what I have to say about certain places and figuring out how to express those feelings," she said. "Art in general is something I've always done. It's the way I express myself most fully — it's a natural thing."

Grossman said Strecker-Nelson first began displaying her work around 1998, and she thinks the gallery is a great place to see a range of local art.

Becky Sundermeier, senior in art and photographer for the gallery's Web site, said Grossman does a great job of tying her traditional landscape theme into the gallery's typically contemporary premise.

"Lisa has a great ability to use color," Sundermeier said. "She takes her real-life experiences and paints from them. Her work really adds to the gallery. Coming to the gallery is great experience, especially for people from small towns. I think it's very unique to Manhattan."

The gallery also features three-dimensional art, ceramics, sculpture and photography. Each room in the gallery features a different artist, and each has an individual theme. Grossman's work is the gallery's primary show, and ceramic artist Amy Kephart's work also is featured in the same room as Grossman's.

City suggests funding for KSU safety

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Safety and environmental sustainability were the two main issues discussed during a committee meeting Monday evening at City Hall.

The City/University Special Projects Fund Committee gathered to review updates on 2007 projects, estimated time frame for completion of approved 2008 projects and funding requests for 2009.

According to a powerpoint presentation, $4.1 million has been expended or approved from calendar year 1996 to 2008, most of which was spent on road construction, new crosswalks and new sidewalks.

The total of requests from 2007 was $379,600, and $394,200 for 2008. The 2009 request total has gone up more than $100,000 to $510,000.

Eight items were presented as requests for 2009 in a powerpoint by Cindy Bontrager, budget director at K-State. She said the most important items were those pertaining to student safety like the emergency prevention, coordination and communication request.

Committee members discussed the feasibility of a campus-wide alert system, which would install new doors in lecture halls. The new doors would automatically lock in the event of an emergency, allowing people to exit but not enter.

Small boxes would also be installed in classrooms and hallways that would sound an alarm and scroll text describing

PILOTS program encourages K-State freshmen to achieve academically

By David Griffin Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

B.J. Taylor has had a successful freshman year at K-State, so far.

Taylor is involved in the K-State PILOTS Program, designed to help freshmen transition from high school to college. According to recent studies, most incoming college freshmen do not have the same smooth transition Taylor experienced.

The American College Testing (ACT) stated that one in every four students leaves college before completing sophomore year. This statistic makes the one-on-one attention PILOTS offers appealing to parents and students who are worried about the transition to college life. PILOTS offers this through tutoring sessions and smaller classroom sizes for general education courses, like College Algebra and Psychology.

Taylor, freshman in open option, said he appreciates the attentiveness the program provides and would recommend it to any incoming freshman.

"You can get help at anytime, you can become friends with some of the PILOT teachers and get help on the side — there's no time that they'll ever tell you, no, they can't help you," Taylor said.

Matthew Groneman, PILOTS lab coordinator, said he has the opportunity to see first hand what the students do in the PILOTS lab.

"The students are out there to succeed and for the most part are willing to work as hard as they need to, to be able to do that," Groneman said.

Gabriela Sabates, PILOTS program director, said the program is a way to empower students to succeed academically.

"This is not a program about survival skills," Sabates said. "It's a program about excelling academically."

Sabates, who has been the program director for the past two years, explained her reason for becoming the new director was the opportunity

Possible recession affects students' job searches

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a possible recession looming, some K-State students might have to take extra precautions to secure future employment.

"I'm not a forecaster, but there is certainly going to be some rough spots," said Anand Desai, associate professor and head of the finance department. "[Recession] is likely. The job field will become highly competitive and [students] need to make sure they're highly prepared to do the job search. It is highly possible that certain areas will be hit harder than others, so they need to remain open in terms of where they look."

Remaining available for all possible employment opportunities is just one of several cautionary steps Desai said students should take to remain ahead of possible recession affects.

Desai said he advises students to begin applying to and seeking possible job opportunities the second semester of their junior year. If a student is going to graduate in May, Desai said it is important for that person to line up job interviews during the fall semester.

"I think what they need to do is start the job search early," he said. "That's always been the case but it's even more important in an uncertain economy because you may not find the right job as quickly as you otherwise would have."

John Newman, senior in accounting and president of the K-State Student Finance Association, said he has discovered a light at the end of the dark recession tunnel. Newman said many opportunities are still available at K-State as long as students are looking in the right places.

Newman listed Conoco Phillips, Koch Industries, Sterner and Sprint as companies that actively pursue K-State finance students and graduates.

"I think a lot of what we're seeing, particularly at K-State, is that we don't have a lot of people who go to Wall Street for jobs, which is where the setback is occurring. From the commercial banks that a lot of our students go to, they're not experiencing a fallout like the shops on Wall Street are," Newman said. "We're still experiencing a lot of opportunities here at K-State."

Ashley Cooley, senior in finance, will be graduating in May and she said she has already found employment for when she leaves K-State.

"When I got a job, I used Career and Employment Services, and right now the job market is really strong," Cooley said. "I'm sure a recession will have an impact on the job market, but right now, it's very strong."

Though Newman himself is a member of the Army Reserves, he had several e-mail requests regarding opportunities for his students and case interviews.

"I think from what I've seen, with a lot of my guys in the finance association, placement has not been a challenge. If they're pursuing those avenues, there seems to be a broad squad of opportunities," he said.

With job prospects in the Midwest remaining high, Newman said he would warn students against seeking employment in Wall Street positions or other similar areas. Recession affecting the Manhattan area, however, seems highly unlikely to him.

Hip-hop group promotes diversity on campus

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Their faces displayed looks of confusion as their dance routine came to a screeching halt.

The group members lost their place, and the music stopped. However, their determination would not allow this technical difficulty stop the performance routine they had worked so hard to learn. The song restarted and the group continued dancing with more energy than before.

The dance group Poize is the only hip-hop dance group at K-State. Its primary focus is to promote diversity through dance, and the group reflects this, involving members of all races. The group wants to grow and eventually represent all ethnic groups, said Kyna Lee, president of Poize and junior in speech pathology.

Poize strives to provide an outlet for students to get involved and feel welcomed on campus, said Brittany Foster, vice president of Poize and sophomore in apparel and textile design.

The group, which started two years ago, has gained popularity on campus as they perform at most multicultural events and receive invitations to perform off campus.

Monday, the group performed in Multicultural Pride Day, a chance for multicultural high school juniors and seniors to visit the K-State campus. During their performance, the group's CD skipped, but they continued with their routine. The crowd apparently appreciated the group's will to keep going and they received a large applause.

"The purpose of the group was to have a group in which students who love to dance – regardless of race – can express their talent," Lee said.

The organization, co-founded by Lee, was formed to bring people with an interest in hip-hop dance together.

Poize has 10 members and is seeking to recruit more. Lee said she takes advantage of every opportunity to promote the group.

Many of the members have training in dance and are versatile in many styles.

"We are really diverse in our group," Foster said. "It's not just hip hop – we fit in modern, ballet and southern-style dancing into our routines."

With more recognition and popularity, the group has received phone calls from schools like the University of Kansas and Emporia State University to perform. Because of a lack of funds, the organization has been fundraising to get uniforms for the team, Lee said. This semester, many students and faculty have seen the group in the K-State Student Union asking for donations on numerous occasions.

The profits from donations and fundraising events will go toward traveling costs to perform at schools who extend invitations to the group, Foster said.

Ethanol production imitates effort to combat pollution

When Henry Ford built his first motor car in 1896 – the quadricycle as Ford called it – it was designed to run on pure ethanol. Though Ford's innovations influenced the entire U.S. economy and infrastructure, his ethanol design never caught on. Gasoline proved cheaper and easier to burn and has been our favorite fuel for the last century.

Now, 112 years later, what is old is new again. Ethanol production is climbing in the U.S. and around the globe. The trend will likely continue; Congress recently set benchmarks to increase our production of ethanol and wean the United States from foreign oil, requiring 7.5 billion gallons of ethanol and biodiesel to be used in our fuel by the year 2012.

Ethanol enjoys a reputation as a clean-burning fuel (the U.S. Department of Energy reports it emits 22 percent less greenhouse gas emissions than gasoline when burned), but the production process is hardly green.

Many ethanol plants use natural gas or coal to create the steam that distills the corn sugars into alcohol. The resulting fossil-fuel emissions diminish the positive effects of burning the cleaner ethanol.

An October 2007 article in National Geographic reported that for every unit of fossil fuel energy needed to produce corn ethanol, only 1.3 units of ethanol output were generated. Compare that with sugarcane ethanol produced in Brazil (ethyl alcohol produced from stalks of giant, tropical sugarcane plants) cranked out at a ratio of eight units of fuel for every unit of input. Biodiesel made from canola oil or soybeans has a ratio of 2.5 to 1.

The production numbers portray ethanol as slightly advantageous to the environment, but the bigger picture is not so rosy. Unlike oil, the U.S. hasn't built pipelines to transport ethanol. The millions of gallons of ethanol produced in the Midwest must be delivered by train, truck or boat – which means more fossil fuels are burned and temperature-raising carbons enter the atmosphere. Increasing corn production to make more ethanol might also be harmful for the environment.

"Corn requires large doses of herbicide and nitrogen fertilizer and can cause more soil erosion than any other crop," wrote Joel Bourne, the National Geographic article's author. "Producing corn ethanol consumes just about as much fossil fuel as the ethanol itself replaces."

It might seem ethanol's future is dim, but the outlook for bio-fuels in general and ethanol production is positive. The efficiency with which corn is converted into ethanol has improved dramatically in the last decade; similar advancements can be expected in the next 10 years.

Alexander Graham Bell called ethanol a "beautifully clean and efficient fuel that can be produced from vegetable matter of almost any kind, even garbage of our city."

He was right, and the promising research of converting any biomass like corn stalks, saw dust and algae into alcohol for fuel is enough to keep our ethanol hopes afloat.

Journalists should be punished for ignoring media embargo

Last July, the prominent British news organizations and their affiliates discovered a tantalizing piece of intelligence that would have, under other circumstances, been the year's singular news story. The once-flamboyant and fun-loving Prince Harry – now a much-celebrated officer in the British Armed Forces – was soon to be deployed to Afghanistan to command a squadron of troops against the Taliban.

However, for sensible and self-evident reasons, the Ministry of Defense demanded a media embargo on any live coverage, offering instead the opportunity for a comprehensive exposé after the completion of his tour. The story would not go forever untold, they promised, only until the young royal's safety could be assured.

A voluntary media blackout of this scale and scope is a rarity in the era of the competitive free press, and we should take great care not to place the blame for what eventually transpired at the feet of the entire profession; that embarrassing and disgraceful debacle was largely the result of one man's greedy attempts to place himself at the center of investigative journalism. The rest of the networks, in spite of themselves, restrained their sensationalist impulses and kept quiet.

The worldwide embargo was first violated when New Idea – an Australian women's magazine apparently oblivious to the arrangement – printed a short and obscure article about it, and the Berliner Kurier printed some unsubstantiated speculation.

The situation only became unmanageable for the Ministry of Defense, however, when Matt Drudge posted a piece about it on his tabloid Web site.

Drudge first gained notoriety for being the first to break the news on the Lewinsky scandal – causing Newsweek Magazine to dump their own more-thoughtful exposé – and has since made a reputation for himself as the most shameless journalist in the blogosphere. There is little doubt he knew what he was doing was wrong; his unapologetic defense stems entirely from the fact he wasn't technically the first to break the embargo. (A curious justification, certainly, juxtaposed with his statements describing his report on the prince as an "exclusive.")

But why would anyone believe in the sincerity of his responses, anyway? This is the same man who once falsely accused Sidney Blu-mental of domestic abuse, only to retract it after the Washington innuendo already had reached saturation. More recently, he torpedoed the reputation of CNN reporter Michael Ware with a demonstrably false allegation, one which turned out to be based on information from an imaginary source.

Drudge and his ilk don't belong in our reasonable journalism context, they belong on the street corners, hollering nonsense with the doomsday lunatics.

To Prince Harry, I doff my cap; I dare say he could teach some of our elected officials a thing or two about personal responsibility. But as for Drudge, treasonous egomaniac who has only once significantly turned out to be right, the question should not be "Should we continue to give him journalistic relevance?" but rather, "Should we ever offer him parole?"

Adam Pham is a senior in economics, music and philosophy. Please send comments to opinion@ksu.edu.

TO THE POINT K-Staters should appreciate Manhattan

The next time you use Old Stadium, you should thank a Manhattan resident. Or if you use the crosswalk lights on Manhattan Avenue, you should remember that it was paid for with local tax dollars.

The City of Manhattan funds several campus projects every year. There are not many universities that have as much city support as K-State.

The City/University Special Projects Fund Committee met Monday night to discuss the requested projects for 2009. The total amount requested, which was more than half a million dollars, was approved by the committee and will now be voted on by the city commissioners.

While improving lighting and crosswalks is always a concern, the committee approved several projects that deal with hot-button issues. For instance, the committee wants to help fund a new recycling center on campus that would be comparable to the University of Kansas' facility. There are also plans to improve campus safety and even requests from committee members for more money to be devoted to security at K-State.

Students and faculty members should take more of an interest in how Manhattan is spending money on campus projects. If you're not doing anything else anyway, you should attend the city-commission meeting when they discuss the City/University fund.

Also, K-Staters should see what they can do to give back to this community. After all, they've already given a lot to K-State.

four dorms. Gross.

So, I'm out in R lot and some guy just totally cut me off for a spot that isn't even that great. Way to be immature.

Matt Combes is by far better than the Fourm and should be the daily news for us.

Dear Starbucks lady: I love you. You gave me my coffee for free when I didn't know you didn't take checks and then my credit card turned out to be missing. Thank you.

Scooter boy.

To the person that kicked my truck: I need $200.

Hi, Fourm. You rock.

There is a magical cloud in the sky in the shape of a weed leaf. And no, I'm not high right now.

Domination.

The dude in front of me in the Burger King line just had a seizure and crashed into Manhattan Christian College.

There's one TKE standing alone in the Caribou

Healthy choices praised for Nutrition Month

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This month, dietitians and health educators are encouraging students to engage in nutritional health and physical activity in observance of National Nutrition Month.

The American Dietetic Association is using this year's theme, "It's a Matter of Fact," to dispel the myths and current fads associated with nutrition and educate Americans on nutritional information, said Annie Weyhrauch, dietetic intern at Illinois State.

"March was chosen as the month to sponsor National Nutrition Month because it's the start of spring," Weyhrauch said. "It's a good time for people to start getting active and put a focus on being nutritionally healthy."

Weyhrauch said much of the nutritional information available is inaccurate, and health educators are seeking to provide basic nutritional value and facts for consumers.

"There is a plethora of poor nutritional information out there, mostly from bad Internet sources," she said. "Everyone claims they're an expert and that they know what they're talking about. If you are seeking nutritional advice, seek it from a professional."

Weyhrauch said she wants consumers to understand they can make a difference in both their own nutrition and the elimination of America's poor nutrition-based diseases, like obesity and diabetes.

Weyhrauch also said America's greatest problem with nutrition is consumers' warped perception of standard portion sizes. Restaurant meals are often two to four times the amount of a normal serving size, she said. Even low-fat or low-calorie foods will add up if consumed in great quantities, she said.

"Any food can fit into a healthy diet if you can fit it into normal portion sizes," Weyhrauch said. "You can enjoy a variety of foods, but eating things in moderation is key to limiting total calories. When eating out, try to save calories by splitting a meal with a friend; when at home, serve your food on smaller plates and be conscious of having second servings."

Weyhrauch said the best way consumers can repair their eating and nutritional habits is to first make small changes, which add up over time.

"Making little adjustments to your diet now can make a real difference in the way you feel in the long run," she said. "Make sure they are changes you can live with, however, as healthy eating is not a fad or a 10-day plan. It's a lifelong process."

Good nutrition has endless benefits for the human body, said Courtney Held, sophomore in dietetics. She said she agrees that starting small is the most effective way to make positive changes.

"Good nutrition increases your quality of life," she said. "It helps you feel and concentrate better, helps prevent chronic diseases and provides you with a constant supply of energy."

The best way to do this is to start small – it's really hard to completely re-do your diet. Little steps are not so overwhelming."

K-Staters best fans in Big 12

The end of the regular season has come and gone. After going to various road games and seeing different sections — Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa State, Baylor — I can honestly say I'm proud of what we've built here in the last year at K-State.

WENDY HAUN

K-State has the largest student section in the Big 12 Conference. Iowa State and Baylor's student sections easily contained fewer than 1,000 students. Plus, both their student sections acted completely out of their element. While K-State has cohesive cheers that it chants in unison at the games, they have different ones coming from all different directions. Most of them you can't understand.

After visiting all these different venues, I honestly believe K-State has the best student section in the conference, with Kansas' coming in a very close second. When I went to Allen Fieldhouse last weekend, the line of blue as I was driving in the parking lot was just awe-inspiring. The Kansas fans truly brought their spirit, but K-State's supporters still are better. The K-State fans camp out for games, hide in the bushes when it's 15 degrees outside and show support for their team, no matter what. Plus, our cheer at the end of the game isn't nearly as annoying as "Rock Chalk Jayhawk."

Last year, former head coach Bob Huggins sent a strong message to the students. He wanted to see pride for this team. Well, Huggins is gone, but K-State is still as proud as ever. At every away game I've been to this year — including the Florida A&M game at the Sprint Center in Kansas City, Mo., on Dec. 17, though that was considered a "home victory" — I've seen purple. It's either been in dots or large doses, but there's always somebody in the stands.

Of course, the transition from having a half-full student section to selling out season tickets for the second-straight year has not come without growing pains. There are even times when the coaches themselves have trouble adjusting. Coach Frank Martin has said multiple times that the K-State fans are the best in the country.

Though Bramlage Coliseum has caused nightmares for teams like Texas A&M, Missouri and Kansas, it's time to move on. This week is the Big 12 Tournament at the Sprint Center. Then, it's on to bigger and better things, hopefully. The Wildcat fan base extends from coast to coast, so let's show them the best fan base in the U.S. Let's go, and pack it with purple through the post-season.

Women's golf looks to regain form in Vegas

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats' spring season got off to a rough start when they finished in fifteenth place with a 99-over par 963 at the Central District Invitational at River Wilderness Golf Course in Parrish, Fla.

The K-State women's golf team is looking to rebound this week in Boulder City, Nev., for the University of Nevada at Las Vegas Spring Rebel Invitational at Boulder Creek Golf Course.

However, coach Kristi Knight said she was not discouraged with her team's play.

"We hadn't been able to get out on the course very much due to the cold weather," Knight said. "I think the girls put a little too much pressure on themselves, but I think we are going to rebound. This is a good team, and we're capable of doing anything."

Senior Hailey Mireles, from Garden City, Kan., led the team in the Central District Invitational with a 22-over par 238, tying her for 48th.

The Wildcats will look to regain the momentum they built in the fall season, which included four top-three finishes. It marked the most since the 2003-04 season combined, when they finished with six top-threes, the most in any single season in school history. They will go against a tough field which features 18 teams, 15 of which rank in Golfweek.com's Top 100.

The tournament is highlighted by Golfweek.com's No. 35 BYU Cougars and the No. 43 Indiana Hoosiers.

The Wildcats enter the three-round, 54-hole tournament ranked No. 75 in the country, according to the Web site.

Knight said she thinks the members of her team have taken advantage of the last few weeks off and really improved some facets of their game.

"We've had great practices leading up to this tournament," Knight said.

K-State tries to extend 3-game winning streak tonight at home

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will look to continue on its first three-game winning streak of the season as it faces the Washington State Cougars at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Wildcats are coming off three-straight victories over the Le Moyne Dolphins last weekend, including a throttling 10-1 victory in the last game of Sunday's doubleheader.

K-State started slow against the Dolphins by falling 8-3 in the first game Saturday, but gained momentum for the rest of the series when the Wildcats were able to mount a ferocious comeback, winning 11-10.

Coach Brad Hill said he thinks the Wildcats are happy with how the weekend series went, but the team members also realize they aren't nearly where they want to be.

"We feel good about winning three straight, but we haven't hit on all cylinders at all yet," Hill said. "We had a couple pretty good comebacks, so we just need to keep playing hard, and it will all come together."

Hill said he thinks some of the lack of production has to do with the players putting too much pressure on themselves.

"We have to try to get the guys to play with a little more confidence and help them relax," Hill said. "We have good players, and when good players play bad, they tend to press. We need to try to get them to loosen up."

Washington State comes into the game against the Wildcats with a winning streak of its own, with 10 victories in its last 11 games. After losing their opener to Creighton, 8-4, the Cougars put together a winning streak of seven before losing to Kent State. Washington

State is on a three-game winning streak, and the Cougars' offense could give the Wildcats several problems.

"The biggest concern is how well they're swinging the bats," Hill said. "Obviously they're playing well because they're 10-2. Compared to us, we are on opposite ends of the spectrum right now."

K-State is also on another streak it wants to break at home tonight against the Cougars. The Wildcats are trying to avoid a loss for the second-straight time after winning three in a row. They also have a chance to end yet another Washington State winning streak, but to do so, Hill said his team will have to go back to the basics.

"Do the fundamentals — it all starts with pitching and defense," he said. "We know we're better on defense, but we have to limit their opportunities. We can't allow big innings."

K-State Basketball players, coach lauded for weekly, seasonal awards

Several K-State players were honored over the weekend for their recent and season-long performances. Freshman forward Michael Beasley, senior guard Kimberly Dietz, junior guard Shalee Lehning and women's coach Deb Patterson were all recognized for their performances.

BEASLEY NAMED BIG 12 PLAYER OF WEEK, YEAR

Beasley added another trophy to his case this week, becoming the second-consecutive freshman to take home Player of the Year. Texas' Kevin Durant walked away with the honor last year. Beasley was also named Freshman of the Year.

Beasley is only the fourth player in school history to receive Player of the Year from the conference offices. Prior to him were Lon Kruger (1973 and 1974), Mike Evans (1977 and 1978) and Orlando Blackman (1980). He's the first player in school history to receive Freshman of the Year accolades.

Beasley was also named Big 12 Player of the Week with Kansas' Sherron Collins. He now has racked up 11 weekly conference awards, which bests Kevin Durant's mark of 10 set last season. He has eight Rookie of the Week awards, which is the most in Big 12 history. Beasley joins Oklahoma's Courtney Paris to be the only players in conference history to be awarded seven consecutive weeks.

BEASLEY, WALKER NAMED TO ALL-BIG 12 TEAM

Beasley was one of two players to be unanimously elected to be on the all-Big 12 First Team. He's the only unanimous selection from K-State in the history of the Big 12. The only other player who was unanimously selected was Texas' D.J. Augustin.

The last time a K-State player was selected to be on the first team was Steve Henson in 1989.

Selected to the all-Big 12 Third Team from K-State was freshman forward Bill Walker. Both Beasley and Walker also were named to the All-Rookie team.

PATTERSON HONORED AS COACH OF THE YEAR

Women's coach Deb Patterson was named the 2007-08 Big 12 women's Coach of the Year.

The Wildcats, who were predicted to finish in eighth place in the conference, picked up a regular-season title last week. The Wildcats became the only team in conference history to finish in 12th the previous year and then win the regular-season title the following year.

PATTERSON

Patterson was named Big 12 Coach of the Year previously during the 2001-02 season.

DIETZ, LEHNING NAMED TO 1ST TEAM

The Big 12 gave all-Big 12 First Team accolades to both Kimberly Dietz and Shalee Lehning. They are the first players from K-State to make the first team since the 2004-05 season.

In the history of the Big 12, the Wildcats have placed two players on the First Team three times, as well as six players be named to the First Team.

DIETZ

LEHNING PLAYER OF THE WEEK

Lehning also received Big 12 Player of the Week after scoring a career-high 29 points and 17 rebounds during the March 5 victory over Kansas. The victory would ultimately secure the regular-season title for the Wildcats.

Lehning is the Big 12's assists leader, averaging more than six per game.

Many graduating seniors look forward to the excitement of building a new life for themselves after college.

However, it is difficult to make a fresh start without proper transportation. This is where a new car comes into the picture. Angela Whay, senior in speech, said she decided to purchase a new vehicle right after college.

"My car has 180,000 miles on it," Whay said.

She said she likes the car she has now and one feature in particular has made a lasting impression on her.

"I love my V-6 engine," she said. "I will never go back to only four [cylinders]."

She said the 1996 Camry she drives has been reliable, but the car's mileage makes her worry it will not last much longer.

"I got it my senior year of high school," Whay said.

Whay said her main concern when looking for a new car is gas mileage.

"I want to be able to drive my car and not have to worry," she said. "It's so expensive to fill up."

Many students choose to buy new cars rather than keeping their old ones for many reasons, but some opt to drive their current vehicle until it breaks down for good.

Ryan Fritz, senior in finance, said he does not plan on buying a new vehicle immediately after graduation. Fritz drives a 1999 Mazda truck he got during his junior year of high school.

Because of the rising cost of gas, Fritz said he will take his next vehicle's mileage into consideration.

"I don't want to spend a lot on gas, and I like to drive places," Fritz said. "I don't need to use all the gas in the world."

Wayde Houghtaling, sales consultant at Dick Edwards, said there are many factors beyond price to consider when purchasing a new car.

The first, and most important, aspect to consider, Houghtaling said, is what the person will use the car for, as there are different cars for different purposes.

"Are you commuting 20 miles, 40 miles, two hours to work?" Houghtaling said. "You know, these kinds of things."

After deciding on the average daily use, cargo and passenger room are taken into consideration, Houghtaling said.

He said when shopping for a new car, the buyer has the responsibility to know what they want, but the salesperson also has the responsibility to listen.

"The whole concept [of selling cars] is fulfilling the person's needs with the vehicle rather than concentrating on a price issue only," Houghtaling said.

Houghtaling said if the salesperson does not take the adequate amount of time, the new car owner will be left with more problems than just an unwanted car.

"If you buy something based on affordability and get a vehicle that does not meet the emotional or physical needs of the person, they won't be satisfied with the vehicle," Houghtaling said. "All that's going to do is end up costing them more money."

Overall, Houghtaling said it is important for buyers to know what they want in a new vehicle.

The rest is up to the salesperson.

MUSIC REVIEW

Brooklyn 3-piece band mixes sounds from '70s, '80s and '90s

"A Place to Bury Strangers"

Review by Mark Sibilla

Though the beginning of the new year can be a frustrating time when it comes to new music, the lack of worthwhile material often allows listeners to discover albums from the previous year that were highly recommended but overlooked by many mainstream publications. One band that has created quite a buzz in the underground music scene is A Place to Bury Strangers, a Brooklyn three-piece that mixes the sounds of early 1990s shoegaze with post-punk aesthetics of the late '70s and early '80s.

Oliver Ackerman fronts the band and also custom builds and designs his own hand-wired guitar pedals that have been used by bands like Lightning Bolt and Serena Maneesh to Wilco and Spoon. To get an idea of A Place to Bury Strangers' sound, one only needs to look at the names of Ackerman's pedals: Interstellar Overdriver, Supersonic Fuzz Gun, Total Sonic Annihilation.

After various stints with different bands around the country, Ackerman moved to New York and hooked up with drummer and bassist Jono Mofo. Together, the trio compiled and remastered various versions of previously recorded CD-Rs and MP3s and created their self-titled debut.

Though many bands have resurrected the blissful, trebly side of shoegaze, few allowed lacerating feedback and frustrated aggression permeate through their music like A Place to Bury Strangers.

Opener "Missing You" begins with cascading washes of brutal guitar feedback and stuttering drum rhythm before giving way to murky, chiming post-punk guitar line and love-wasted lyrics. These verses give way to a chorus of "I want to fall in love with you," which is backed by the same shattering guitar line that opens the song. These blasts of blown-out guitar perfectly accentuate the longing by the narrator of the song feels, bringing an additional emotional heft to the frustration and emotion of professing one's feelings of love.

"Don't Think Lover" opens with brutal textures of feedback before leading into one of the most tuneful songs on the album. The same three chords are pounded viciously into the listener's ear, and this is followed by a chord change that sounds like the dying bellows of a Tyrannosaurus.

Primitive, preprogrammed drum beats dominate the excellent "To Fix the Gash in Your Head." This is complemented by a trebly synthesizer line and buzzsaw guitar lines. The song's aggressive nature is echoed in its violent lyrics. The track sounds evokes late-'80s industrial bands with its intense rhythms and powerful feedback.

In addition to creating mind-bending rockers, A Place to Bury Strangers also is adept at adapting its sound to slow-burning numbers that are every bit as potent as the more straight-forward songs.

"The Falling Sun" is the band in slow motion. A plodding, thundering drum rhythm keeps the song together while a menacing synthesizer line lingers in the background. About one-and-a-half minutes into the song, the song slowly explodes into a squall of feedback that carries ebbs and flows in and out of the song, creating a very palpable sense of tension.

A Place to Bury Strangers can create beauty out of eardrum-shattering harshness. Originally, the album was quite a chore for record buyers to find because of its limited initial production numbers and the fact it is released on the tiny label Killer Pimp. But because the album has been out for several months, it has become easier to find a copy, and this is the perfect time to acquire a copy of this seminal debut album.

Alternative breaks become K-State tradition

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spring Break Alternatives was started in 1994 and marked the beginning of what would become a very successful program for K-State students looking for a rewarding vacation.

The following article was taken from the March 30, 1995, Collegian and written by Janet Gilliland.

Instead of going skiing or relaxing on the beach for spring break, some K-State students donated their time participating in Spring Break Alternatives.

"It is a week-long immersion into a culture that is totally different than what they are used to," Clint Leonard, junior in biochemistry and pre-medicine and coordinator of the event, said.

Students who participate in the program go in groups of eight to 10 and travel to a host site in a socio-economic poor area.

"We serve the people at the sites materially, but it is also great for them to see young people coming to help," he said.

Leonard said this was the second year for the program at K-State. Last year, there were two sites and 16 people. This year, there were four sites that consisted of 34 people.

Megan Curran, sophomore in pre-nursing, went to Chicago with Spring Break Alternatives.

Curran said she worked in a soup kitchen for homeless men and women and at another area that was for families, where she worked with the children.

"I had never experienced working with homeless people before, and I realized that there are a lot of things I do not need and that I take for granted," she said.

Chris Hansen, sophomore in nuclear engineering, went with another group to a center in Mexico where they visited neighboring villages and delivered toys and clothes.

"By working in the villages in Mexico, I learned to put my own life into perspective, and I learned a lot about myself. I saw how lucky we are living here because we have choices," Hansen said.

Lisa Pierce, junior in pre-occupational therapy, went to the third site, which was in the Appalachian Mountains in Kentucky.

"I helped with home-improvement projects in Kentucky. It was a good feeling I got knowing that I was helping out people, and I gave myself for another human being," she said.

Leonard said anyone at K-State can participate in this program. People are selected on a first-come, first-served basis.

"All of the spots for this year were filled up one month ago. I can see us adding another site or two next year. The number limit is based upon the number of sites," he said.

"People can start signing up at the beginning of January. You can sign up at the St. Isidore's Catholic Center, but you do not have to be Catholic to participate."

Like other spring break trips, students have to pay their own way.

"The students pay their own way, but we did get an allocation from SGA that helped out. The cost is very small compared to other spring breaks that students go on," Leonard said.

Housing for the volunteers varies. Some places have beds, while other places just have a floor to sleep on.

WOMEN | Team focuses on future

"We've been outside more often these past few weeks, and we've really worked on improving our wedge game."

The Wildcats will be led by senior Kali Quick, a native of Nampa, Idaho, who has averaged the top score on the team with a 77.06 through 17-rounds.

Knight said she thinks her team will return to the way they were playing in the fall, and she is looking forward to the rest of the season.

"I'm as confident in them today as I was a month ago," Knight said. "One tournament isn't going to define us as a team - we're better than that, and there's been no feeling sorry for ourselves. It's just a matter of going out and playing and making good decisions."

CITY | Safety, recycling discussed

the nature of the emergency. According to the powerpoint, $100,000 was requested for next year.

It would take about $10,000 to install each door, said Mark Taussig, interim associate director of Facility planning facilities.

Several committee members raised concerns about the feasibility of the program, which is planned to be implemented by Alertus Emergency Warning Systems.

"The reality is we just don't have funding to suddenly make K-State a totally safe place," said Bruce Shubert, associate vice president of the department of administration and finance at K-State. "So we'll just have to make progress as best we can."

The installation of the new doors, software and alert panels will be funded over the course of three or more years, Shubert said.

"I think some research still needs to be done on [the alert system]," Bontrager said.

The committee also discussed a new 7,200 square feet recycling/sorting center, which committee members said they expected to cost around $500,000.

Some committee members said they thought more money should be spent on safety than on recycling.

"I think the recycling center is important - I think safety is more important," said Roger Adams, faculty representative and associate professor at Hale Library. "I think the recycling center is fine, I think it's a great idea, but in the end it's not saving lives."

ART | Gallery offers soothing atmosphere

The gallery, located at 406 1/2 Poyntz Ave., also has a café and coffee shop and has begun to feature live indie-folk music.

Students and Manhattan residents take advantage of the gallery because of its soothing atmosphere and impressive art display.

"I come to the gallery to look at things other people create," Kory Pedersen, Manhattan resident, said. "Its café also has really good coffee and gives me a place to work away from my home. People have a close-minded view of the atmosphere of this area - so much that goes on here goes unnoticed."

DUI | Officer numbers, weather factors in DUIs

Moldrup said.

One reason there were not more arrests was because there are a limited number of arrests that can be made by a force of four officers, Moldrup said.

"You can only get so many," he said. "Once we make an arrest, that officer is off the streets for a little bit. When you have that many, it makes it difficult to get more."

He said when officers make a DUI arrest, they will be off the road for anywhere from 45 minutes to an hour, depending on how busy the jail and officers are. He also said the weather usually has an effect.

"If it had been nicer weather, there would have been more people out partying, thus driving, and therefore, the greater the chances of people being caught driving under the influence," Moldrup said.

PILOTS | Program awards $500 scholarship to work with freshman students because they show a lot of "pure potential."

The program also offers a private computer lab, class clusters, peer mentors, free tutoring and a variety of scholarship and recognition opportunities.

Every academic year, the program has an awards ceremony that serves as a wrap-up to the freshmen's hard work. The premier award is the Emerging Leader Scholarship, which is a $500 scholarship.

The program extends its network to students in all colleges of the university, and there is no curriculum major requirement to be a part of the program, Sabates explained.

Judith Lynch, director of the academic assistance center, said she has seen the program grow over its 15 years of existence. She said it was mandated by the region that the university do something to help first-generation students and minority students who might be struggling and to make sure they can succeed.

"We started referring to it as PILOTS because it makes sense to us that we are - we're teaching students how to fly," Lynch said. "The sky's the limit."

HEALTH | Small changes suggested for dieters

America's fast-paced lifestyles and complacent attitudes toward their diets have caused the country to suffer from a large amount of obesity-related diseases, said Dianna Schalles, dietician and health educator at Lafene Health Center.

She said this busy lifestyle and lazy mentality make it challenging for consumers to fuel their bodies with the necessary amounts of nutrient-rich foods. Nine of 10 college students eat fewer than five servings of fruits and vegetables per day, Schalles said. Stress also contributes to poor eating choices, she said.

"Despite the ever-expanding quality of food products available to consumers, the quality of our individual food choices is decreasing, with packaged and highly processed foods often being substituted for the whole grains, fruits, vegetables and lean proteins that are the foundation of a healthy diet," Schalles said. "Due to many of us being conditioned from childhood to view food as a reward, many people turn to food to cope with life stressors."

Schalles said students should choose whole grains, fruits and vegetables to start eating a healthier diet.

"Students should look for nature's '100-Calorie Packs': 1 medium banana, 1/2 - 1 cup whole grain cereal, 1 apple, 1 cup low fat milk or soymilk, 14 almonds, 1 serving of string cheese with 1/4 cup carrots, 3/4 cup grapes," Schalles said.

"Even a small child can do this, so we don't have to overly focus on what individual nutrients a food provides."

Lafene offers Healthy PAC-CATS, a program by peer mentors to help students assess their own personal situations and set goals for improved fitness, nutrition and stress management, Schalles said. The health center also offers individualized nutrition counseling to students who struggle with underlying issues that contribute to disordered eating.

In the shadows

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

The temporary location for the recycling program called the "Shepherd's House," is located on a gravel road off Dension Avenue. K-State is requesting $480,500 from the city for a new recycling facility.

The University of Kansas earns $50,000 in revenues from its recycling program each year, whereas K-State earns about $5,000. KU's recycling money helps fund its three recycling facilities, some of which are shown above.

K-State lacking in recycling facilities, hopes to improve

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is requesting $480,500 from the city university fund for a new recycling facility. The new building will form the base for a new, all-campus recycling program at K-State.

Tom Rawson, K-State's vice president for administration and finance, said the university wants a bigger building to replace its temporary location at the "shepherd's house," which the Facilities Department has been using for the last few years.

John Woods, director of facilities services, said the funding request was partially approved Monday evening, but will not be voted on by city commissioners until June or July.

The university will not receive the money until February 2009, if passed.

A PASSION FOR RECYCLING

Though K-State's recycling program has existed since 1989, Rawson said it has not been visible.

"We're ramping that up to a more aggressive program," Rawson said.

Jon-Edward Thorsell, senior in civil engineering, has been researching K-State's recycling program for the last six months. He said he has spent 20-40 hours per week investigating other Big 12 Conference universities' programs, trying to discover what makes them effective. He has compiled his research into a detailed program proposal for the university.

"There's no reason we can't do better," Thorsell said. "If everyone is doing such a great job, then why aren't we at the top of that list?"

Thorsell said he took on this project by himself because he wanted people to realize that K-State's recycling program needed to improve.

"I didn't know what I was getting myself into," Thorsell said.

He gathered pictures, facts and statistics from most of the Big 12 Universities and came to several conclusions about how K-State could improve.

"The main point is, we need to have a plan," Thorsell said. "When it comes to K-State moving forward, we need to look into other programs to see what is working for them, and don't just rush it. This is an excellent opportunity because we have a clean slate."

Thorsell's proposal stated that K-State earns about $5,000 per year by recycling 300 tons of goods. Its temporary facility has less

K-State's recycling program has been in existence since 1989 and is coordinated through the Custodial Department. According to K-State's recycling Web site, there are currently 30 facilities participating in the recycling effort in some form. These efforts include relocating existing receptacles, including new products and increasing staff workers. One of the recent initiatives has been adding recycling receptacles in administrators' offices.

Jon-Edward Thorsell, senior in civil engineering, said he noticed the recycling issue on campus two years ago and has been doing extensive research for the last six months. Thorsell compared the K-State recycling program to different schools in the Big 12, including the University of Texas, the University of Kansas and the University of Colorado, and saw the need for improvement.

"Once I committed to this idea, I pulled my trigger and took the initiative," he said. "Back in October, I thought, you know, if no other student is going to fight for this cause, then I will."

John Woods, director of facilities services, said the new initiative is called the desk-side program. This program gives administrators the opportunity to either dispose of their recycling by taking it to a hallway, or by having a recycling bin at their desk. Faculty have the option to choose whether or not they want to be a part of the desk-side program, but Woods said he hopes there will be more participation by having the bins at the desk.

"We are taking it building by building," he said. "Trash will only be picked up once a week, but the recycling will be picked up several times a week."

The new desk-side bins are currently located in some of the buildings on campus including Throckmorton, Ackert, Chalmers and Dyk-

Police to conduct sobriety checkpoint

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many people will hit the bars this coming week and enjoy their anxiously awaited spring break. With more partying during spring break, the opportunities for drunken drivers on the road increases.

According to a Riley County Police Department press release, the RCPD will conduct a sobriety checkpoint between 12:30 Saturday afternoon and 2:30 Sunday morning. The checkpoint will take place in the south central area of Manhattan.

The checkpoint date was chosen because spring break occurs during this time, which means more people will be out on the street and the area is more prone to drunken drivers, RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said.

The focus of these types of check points is not exclusively students, Moldrup said.

"Our targets in checkpoints are intoxicated drivers," he said.

Even though many K-State students leave for spring break, many people are still in the area, Moldrup said. Many military and community members, as well as high-school and college students, stay behind, and increased reports of drinking happens during this vacationing period, Moldrup added.

The checkpoint should not be confused with a saturation patrol, which is what took place last weekend. A saturation patrol happens when many officers spread out in the community and consciously look for impaired drivers.

During a checkpoint, a specific location is selected and every car entering the point is stopped for a brief conversation about the checkpoint with an officer.

"During the conversation, officers will determine if a driver could be impaired," Moldrup said. "Those suspected of driving impaired will be pulled to the side for a sobriety test and potentially a breath test."

Moldrup said knowledge of the checkpoint itself might deter drinkers from getting behind the wheel, and the checkpoint locations are selected for problem areas.

"It makes people think twice about driving impaired," Moldrup said. "Checkpoints are located where we expect a lot of impaired drivers."

Manhattan airport to expand

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Regional Airport flight services are changing. Starting March 30, Great Lakes Air Service will take over flights to Kansas City, Mo.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said Mesa Air Service was contracted in December 2007 to continue being the air provider to Kansas City, but then withdrew its bid when it decided to discontinue service in all regional air flight markets.

"It was one hand not talking to the other," City Commissioner Bob Strawn said about the confusion.

NICARAGUANS CELEBRATE MASS FOR DOGS, PRAY FOR CURES

MASAYA, Nicaragua — Hundreds of dogs, many dressed as babies or clowns, were taken to celebrate mass in this Nicaraguan town on Sunday, an annual ritual where the owners pray for their pets to be cured or avoid falling ill.

A long queue of Catholics, carrying their pets or leading them on leashes, waited their turn to pass by an image of a saint in a tiny church in this town 20 miles to the south of the Nicaragua capital, Managua.

The faithful thanked the saint for curing their pets or asked for the dogs to be protected from illness. The town's priest always conducts a special canine mass.

"We brought him so he does not get sick," said local resident Nora Espinosa, talking about her six-month-old Basset Hound, dressed in a soccer outfit.

Locals say the tradition goes back to the colonial period after the Spanish conquest.

COLORADO WOMAN FACES FINE FOR DYEING POODLE PINK

BOULDER, Colo. — A Boulder woman facing a $1,000 fine for dyeing her poodle pink has hired a lawyer to fight the charge in court.

Joy Douglas says she dyed Cici, her white miniature poodle, to call attention to breast cancer. She says she used beet juice and Kool-Aid.

She was ticketed March 1 under a Boulder ordinance that makes it illegal to dye animals. The ordinance is designed to discourage people from dyeing rabbits and chicks for Easter.

Douglas had a court hearing scheduled Tuesday, but the judge postponed it until April after she said she has hired a lawyer.

Douglas took Cici with her Tuesday but had to leave her outside the courthouse.

'SNIFF SQUAD' TO RATE LANDFILL SMELLS

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — A "sniff squad" of trained noses is being called in to root out Northampton's landfill odors. The city has hired specially trained stink-sniffers to help determine whether the dump is too pungent for neighboring homeowners to stand.

Using little more than their own noses, the super sniffers are trained to detect and rate the strength of rotting trash, landfill gases and other unpleasanties.

Ratings are on a 1 to 8 scale — roughly, from bearable to foul beyond belief.

The city could be fined or ordered to make changes if the landfill flunks the smell test.

MAN ACCUSED OF ROBBERIES ON HIS 43RD B-DAY

SPOKANE, Wash. — Spokane police say a man picked the wrong way to celebrate his 43rd birthday. Dawayne D. Butler is accused of committing two robberies in less than half an hour.

According to a police report, a man demanded money and said he had a gun at a Rite Aid store late Sunday afternoon, only to flee when a manager intervened.

Using the same approach, a man got an undisclosed amount of money and checks from a Shopko, 25 minutes later.

Soon afterward police received a report of money and checks in the street, and Butler was stopped in a vehicle and arrested based on witness descriptions.

Programs encourage HS girls to become interested in science

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's College of Engineering, like many engineering programs across the country, has been traditionally male-oriented, but that has not stopped women from excelling in the college.

The undergraduate female population at K-State is 48 percent and there's about 23 percent of those women involved engineering program, said Kimberly Douglas, associate professor in engineering and director of the Women in Engineering Science Program.

The Women in Engineering and Science Program, also known as WESP, strives to promote this effort. A group called EXCITE, which stands for "Exploring Science Technology and Engineering," connects female K-State students with adolescent girls who are interested in science and engineering and helps younger students gain familiarity with jobs in science and engineering.

"We send out packages in the spring to all the middle schools and high schools in the state of Kansas," said Susan Arnold Christian, WESP outreach program coordinator.

Science and math teachers at participating middle schools and high schools approach students about hands-on work in engineering and science.

"It gets kids out of the classroom and into the laboratory," said Chris Sorensen, university distinguished professor of physics.

Christian said 46 percent of EXCITE participants from the program's first year are continuing their education in engineering, science or education.

Kimberly Relph, senior in life sciences, was a mentor in the EXCITE program for the past two years and said she might do so again this summer.

"It's really interesting to see the girls so involved," Relph said.

EXCITE students who continue their education at K-State are placed in small groups with other freshman girls who are majoring in either science or engineering. These groups are led by upperclassmen who are in the same field.

"There are more [female] undergraduates majoring in engineering now than when I was in school," Sorensen said.

"The girls have so much fun and so do I," he said.

Job opportunities, wages to increase in Manhattan, say city commissioners

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are help-wanted signs on business windows and constant ads in local newspapers encouraging readers to apply for jobs, but some local businesses are having a difficult time finding employees.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said this is because almost everyone who wants a job has a job. Employers might be in need of workers, which could cause an increase in the wages in Manhattan, he said.

"The reality is that there is close to full employment in Manhattan," Snead said. "Whether wages are low or not is a personal evaluation or a comparison. Overall, I think there is low unemployment, and in that situation, where there is a shortage of labor, wages tend to move upward."

With a population of about 50,000, Manhattan is set to expand economically with new developments like the expensive downtown redevelopment plan, which includes proposals for a discovery center, hotel, movie theater, conference center and retail and restaurant space.

According to a study performed by bestplaces.net, the 2007 unemployment rate in Manhattan was 3.2 percent. This percentage represents the number of people in the city who are currently out of work, available to work and currently looking for jobs. Over the next 10 years, the job growth in Manhattan is predicted to increase by about 14 percent.

Manhattan was ranked No.

6 in the college-town-community class in 2000 by ePdark.com. K-State and Fort Riley were among the top employers, City Commissioner Bob Strawn said.

"Wages are probably low in Manhattan — that's a result of the amount of people willing to work," Strawn said.

Strawn mentioned the majority of jobs that are available in Manhattan are mainly retail and grocery stores, which are known to have low wages. There are also military dependents in the community who are currently seeking work.

"The overall market for student jobs is part-time," he said. "We have a large pool of talent available in Manhattan, and that can have an effect on the job opportunities available for students."

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

IHOP is one of many businesses around Manhattan that is looking for new employees to fill shifts. City Commissioner Bruce Snead said there might be a raise in wages in Manhattan because of a shortage of workers.

Wasteful spending

Senate needs to re-examine how it budgets students' money

When students need to buy school supplies, many proceed to the ATM and are forced to withdraw $40 worth of funds because the machine only allowed money to be taken out in $20 increments.

BRETT KING

In the bookstore, one of these students picked up pencils, pens, a notebook and paper. The total cost for the supplies came to $15. The student handed the cashier a $20 bill and received $5 back.

After this transaction, the student still has $25 to use towards monthly expenses.

This little story might seem like common sense to the average student, but it seems not to register with Student Governing Association.

According to the SGA Student Activity Budget Agreement, "Any funds not spent at the end of the fiscal year shall be reverted back to the Reserves for Contingencies Account." This also extends to student groups who do not use all the funding they are allocated for specific projects.

Even though this money should go back into the budget to help fund other groups, it is put into a reserves account. Each year, SGA has been dipping into these reserves to pay for group activities. The purpose of these reserves is to help fund groups in emergency situations, but a budget is still a budget.

Each year students are forced to pay their student privilege fees, which, according to student body president Matt Wagner, totaled $304.90 this year. The money is collected and then distributed to different groups like campus organizations, multicultural organizations, college councils, graduate student councils, academic competitions and institutional services.

After spring break, SGA will be voting on some of the allocations for the 2009 fiscal year through the Student Centered Tuition Enhancement Bill. Currently this bill has an operating budget of roughly $1 million.

Our money makes up part of these funds that SGA uses to fund programs on campus. There should be checks and balances on how it is spent, and SGA needs to be pressured to stay within its budget instead of dipping into reserves.

SGA has methods of approving allocations; most are based on educational value, amount of funds already requested and time at which requests are submitted.

Last Saturday's Harry Potter Wizard rock concert is a prime example of why SGA should be held in check with its funding. This concert received more than $1,800 of our money and was put on under the pretense it would increase literacy rates.

If my money is being spent on campus, it better be for the benefit of college students. Last time I checked, having the ability to read is an important part of getting into college.

According to a March 10 Collegian article, the group was using this as a fundraiser for First Book, "a nonprofit organization providing disadvantaged children with new books."

Though this might be a noble cause, other student groups with equally high aims have been denied funding for fundraising activities.

According to the campus-wide 2008 budget request forms, Habitat for Humanity was denied funding for its program on Feb. 2.

It is time for SGA to set firm standards for determining allocations or learn and start using the word my father used when I asked for money outside of the family budget — no.

Conservative political commentator needs own checks, balances system

Bill O'Reilly did it again. Then again — no surprise.

Recently on "The O'Reilly Factor,"

O'Reilly compared Arianna Huffington of the Huffington Post to Nazis and the Ku Klux Klan. He said that after the Huffington Post ran an article about how Nancy Reagan was hospitalized after falling in Bel-Air, Calif., on Sunday, a number of bloggers were allowed to leave distasteful and crude comments on the Post's message boards.

O'Reilly gave the following example on his own Web site, billoreilly.com.

"Like her evil husband," one of the commentators said, "she has lived far too long. Here's hoping the hag suffers for several weeks, then croaks in the tub."

Vicious, no doubt. Unfortunately, O'Reilly did what no other can do in the same style: make an idiot of himself.

"If you look back at what happened in Germany," O'Reilly said on "The O'Reilly Factor" on Feb. 27, "you cannot escape the similarities — what Hitler and his cutthroats did back then and the hate-filled blogs, what they're doing now ... Today we're seeing the same thing on the Net."

Later in the same segment, he summed it all up: "I don't see a difference between [Arianna] Huffington and the Nazis."

Recently, O'Reilly has set his sights on left-wing blogs, message boards and who he considers irresponsible Internet users who smear conservatives. Media Matters for America, DailyKos and Moveon.org have been just a few of O'Reilly's targets. The Huffington Post is now among the ranks.

Likewise, O'Reilly is on the front lines when it comes to blogging. Not a bad cause — unless you take sides, in which case O'Reilly should have no say.

O'Reilly's Web site has forums in which members can discuss their opinions on issues. However, on July 24, 2007, special guest Howard Wolfson, communications director for Hillary Clinton's campaign, pointed out some distasteful posts about illegal immigrants made on the forum.

"That's bull," O'Reilly said in response. "We know what you're going to say because the Kos planted somebody in there."

By Kos, he meant the liberal blog DailyKos.

Way to solve that problem, Bill. Blame liberals.

Liberal bloggers are obviously never out of O'Reilly's sight. However, it's strange how some conservative bloggers manage to slip by him.

Take conservative blogger and pundit Michelle Malkin for example. In her blog on Aug. 12, 2006, Malkin wrote about how the anti-war group Students Against War protested military recruitment at the University of California at Santa Cruz. Not only did Malkin voice her opinion about the escalating protests — which she had the right to do — but she posted some students' personal information on her own blog. These students of SAW began receiving death threats shortly after.

Bottom line: Bill O'Reilly is the last person who can say anything about online bloggers when he can't even control the most radical elements of his own wing. I've seen the posts and comments from the left that O'Reilly always brings up. However, I've also seen the same thing on conservative blogs. Apparently, O'Reilly can't see such problems, even in Michelle Malkin's case, when the offenses are nearly inches away from a felony. Why didn't O'Reilly do anything about it?

Don't get me wrong here. O'Reilly is a passionate commentator with his "man against the world" view on life. Since 1999, he has gradually evolved from some nameless commentator into an American icon. His biggest flaw: his ego. Now that he can no longer achieve his high by attacking Sept. 11 "truthers," France, and liberal commentator Al Franken, he seems to have his sights on the Internet.

Technology is as much a blessing as it is a curse. And if someone can't take the heat, that lucky person shouldn't have a computer in the first place.

"In order for a country to be truly free, people must be responsible and fair-minded," O'Reilly wrote on his own blog. "Right now, I believe the Internet is taking us in the opposite direction."

Remember, Bill, hypocrisy is spelled with a big fat "H."

TO THE POINT

Students should support recycling effort

The recycling program at K-State has always been somewhat lacking, there are just a few bins scattered through campus. This is one area where the University of Kansas really does beat us.

Finally, K-State is on its way to catch up with the other Big 12 universities' recycling programs. Many people are taking small steps to improve recycling on campus by spreading the word, placing bins in their homes and getting the new desk-side recycling bins for faculty.

Bigger plans are even being made to build a new recycling facility to replace the current facility, which is old and much too small.

Students and faculty should support the efforts made by people who are trying to improve recycling at K-State, whether it be by actively getting involved or simply utilizing whatever new recycling options are available to them.

The Collegian applauds people like Jon Edward Thorsell, senior in civil engineering, who has dedicated hours to making K-State a more environmentally friendly university. But his efforts will be ineffective without student and faculty support.

So quit throwing away those beer cans and all those Collegian newspapers. Put them in the appropriate recycling bin.

Local grocery store offers healthy, fair alternatives to chain stores

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All-natural, organic, minimally processed and fairly traded foods and personal items are layered throughout People's Grocery Cooperative's five aisles.

Stacy Smith, People's general manager, said all of the store's food items contain fewer fillers, preservatives, pesticides, antibiotics and hormones than food normally found in chain grocery stores.

"Minimum processing is simply better for you," Smith said. "It's like the difference between buying a Cadillac and buying a Chevy—both cars are going to get you places, but you're going to get there in better shape in one. You get better fuel out of it, you feel better, have more energy and have less calories in a lot of cases."

People's, 523 S. 17th St., is the only cooperative grocery store in Manhattan, Smith said. This means that instead of an individual owning the store, people who participate in the co-op essentially own a portion of it and have a say in how it's run. Smith said co-op members annually elect the store's board of directors who oversee the general manager, who runs the store.

"It's a different way of doing business," Smith said. "The customer is part of it instead of just being a consumer."

She said people can sign up for a membership for $55, and in turn, they will receive a 10 percent discount twice a month, newsletters on the organization and money back at the end of the year, depending on how much the member has spent.

Terrie McCants, Manhattan resident, said even though she is not a member, she shops at People's because of its selection of organic and natural foods.

McCants said as she has gotten older, she has started to look at health from a more preventative stance, as opposed to just treating symptoms, and she said she likes People's health and "good-living" focus.

"I like the staff knowledge here," she said. "I can come in and say, 'OK, I'm having a headache. What do I need to be doing to restore health?' They have that kind of information that's difficult to find in a supermarket—[supermarket workers] can tell you what aisles things are on, but not necessarily that added health dimension."

Adara Leonard, People's employee, said she has been working for the store since October and enjoys its local, laid-back atmosphere as opposed to that of a large corporation. She said she buys her groceries from the store because "it's a lot healthier than the regular stuff you get at Wal-Mart that has all that extra crap in it."

Tom Park, junior in economics, said he regularly shops at People's not only because of its organic food selection, but because it gives him the opportunity to support local farmers.

Smith said a majority of the store's items come from local vendors who are in-state or just out of state.

"We have a lot of small businesses that supply us that we're supporting," she said. "We're able to get different products that you might not see in a larger store."

Smith said one of People's newest local products, Anthony's Beehive, based in Lawrence and includes natural honey, beef jerky and lip balms.

People's also offers a number of fair-trade goods like coffees, teas and chocolates. Smith said she has seen many people concerned with who made their food and where it came from.

"Fair trade is more ethical," she said. "People making [the products] actually get paid a fair, living wage for their work. A lot of these people are women from developing countries, and in their country, they don't have an opportunity to go to college and get a better job. So we're helping to improve the quality of life for women and children throughout the world."

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Catie Carpenter, middle, and Eva Newill, seniors in interior design, pay for their items after making a stop at the People's Grocery Cooperative in Manhattan. The store specializes in alternative foods, mostly organic.

The prices of the organic and fairly traded goods at People's is higher than the generic products found at conglomerate stores. This, Smith said, is because the producers are actually being paid fair wages.

Park said he has no problem paying a few extra dollars if it means helping out others.

"Their prices obviously can't compete with larger grocery stores," he said. "They are a little more expensive in general, yet the idea that I'm supporting local business still keeps me going there."

Subway's Tuesday special discontinued

By Whitney Hodgins
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students love cheap stuff, and they especially love cheap food. So when the Subway in the K-State Student Union posted an announcement that the "Hooray for Tuesday" half-price foot-long special will end on March 24, many students were less than thrilled.

The change was made by Subway's corporate headquarters, said manager Robert Conner. Instead of half-price Tuesdays, all foot-long subs will be sold for $5 every day.

"We're making it better!" a poster next to the cash register declared, but customers aren't so sure.

Cole McDaniel is a Union Recreation employee who works near Subway in the basement of the Union. He said he disagrees with the logic behind the change.

"They do more business on Tuesday than any other day because of that sale," McDaniel, junior in business, said. "Lower prices on a daily basis won't even the gap."

Conner said the Subway Corp. hoped to get more business every day instead of just one day, but personally he agrees with McDaniel.

"I think students will hate the change because meatball subs and cold cuts are a very popular Tuesday special, and now every foot-long will be $5."

Not to worry, however. The poster's fine print specified it was for a limited time only.

Athletic director search on hold until after postseason

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The search for a replacement for former K-State athletic director Tim Weiser is on the back burner because of the involvement of the basketball teams in post-season play, said Bob Krause, vice-president for institutional advancement.

"There are so many things going on with wrap up of basketball and the Big 12 tournament coming up," Krause said. "We're currently concentrating on that. After basketball season is over, we'll consider how to approach this."

The new athletic director will be found and hired by K-State President Jon Wefald.

Krause said to find a replacement, K-State will utilize executive search firms to find potential candidates.

"Many potential candidates are very successfully employed and are hesitant to throw their names into an interview process," he said.

Weiser was hired after a search firm in Colorado included him in their list to K-State. Krause said there are four or five national firms that specialize in Division I athletics.

"We're searching for someone with a wealth of experience who understands what Division I is all about," he said.

Currently, the athletics department is dealing with the facilities development program and negotiating contracts. Krause said when the time is right, the administration will concentrate on the search.

"We're going to get basketball wrapped up, and then we can seriously put our attention to it," he said. "We'll get our focus on it tighter than it is now."

Cats slug 4 home runs, hold on for 9-6 win against Cougars

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and Washington State combined for seven home runs and 22 hits Tuesday night, with the Wildcats rolling to 9-6 victory at Tointon Family Stadium.

While there was an above average amount of long balls hit in Manhattan last night, there was also some good pitching as well, most notably from the K-State bullpen, which held Washington State to no hits and only one base runner for four innings.

Both teams got off to quick starts with the Wildcats racking up three runs in the bottom of the first inning off of two hits. K-State was also bailed out by the Cougars defense, picking up two of those three runs after back-to-back errors by Washington State first baseman Jim Murphy.

K-State junior shortstop Drew Biery picked up two of his four RBIs on a line drive up the middle off of starting Washington State pitcher Michael Ratigan.

Rightfielder Jared Prince didn't waste any time getting the visiting Cougars rally started with a lead-off home run of his own in the second inning, that was all the Cougars were able to muster in their half of the inning.

K-State freshman Carter Jurica also hit a lead-off home run for the Wildcats in the bottom half of the inning. Deep in a full count,

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

K-State center fielder Dane Yelovich slides into home for a run during the first inning. It was Yelovich's only run of the night, and K-State went on to beat Washington State 9-6.

Jurica finally found a pitch to drive and sent a shot over the left field wall, extending the Wildcat lead, 4-1.

K-State junior starting pitcher, Todd Vogel ran into some trouble that ultimately took him out of the game in the third inning. Washington State was able to build off their second inning rally with back-to-back home runs by third baseman Paul Graun, who hit a two-run shot, and Murphy, who made up for his defensive errors in the first inning.

Vogel gave up three runs in the third inning, and Washington State tied the game, 4-4. In 2007, Vogel won three games and struck out 28 batters in just 46.2 innings of work.

As was the style Tuesday, sophomore Justin Bloxom hit a Ratigan pitch

MEN'S GOLF

Men's golf team finishes in 13th place in Fresno, Calif.

By Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sophomores Joe Ida and Mitchell Gregson led the charge as the K-State men's golf team finished the Fresno Lexus Classic in 13th place on Tuesday in Fresno, Calif.

As a team, the Wildcats shot a six-over par 872, leaving them 31 strokes behind tournament champion San Diego State. Other notable teams finishing ahead of K-State included the Wildcats' Big 12 Conference teammate Texas, who had a 20-under par 844, and national powerhouses Oregon, who had a nine-under par 855, and Texas Christian, who was at one-under par 863.

Ida led all Wildcats with a two-under par 214, including a four-under par 68 in the second round. His effort was good enough for a tie for 20th place in the overall standings. Gregson, coming off a sixth-place finish in the Braveheart Classic, struggled early but finished with an even-par 216 after a combined five-under par 139 in the final two rounds. He finished tied for 56th place.

Junior Robert Streb finished the tournament with a three-over par 219 and freshman Daniel Wood, who earned his lineup spot after finishing tied for 27th place last week, ended with an eight-over par 224. Senior Kyle Yonke continued to struggle after his 17-over par performance in the Braveheart and finished play Tuesday with a 10-over par 226.

The 13th-place finish was the worst finish for K-State this season, and it snapped a streak of eight consecutive top-10 finishes that started with a ninth place finish in the Big 12 Championship on April 24, 2007. The Wildcats will return to action on March 21 when they travel to Goodyear, Ariz., for the Ron Moore Invitational.

Scott on academic award watch list

Senior second baseman Brett Scott is one of 30 candidates vying for the Lowe's Senior Class Award.

Scott is the ninth player in K-State history to be an academic All-American. He was named to the 2007 ESPN the Magazine third team last season. He was also named to the first team academic All-Big 12 Conference team. Scott was on the 2007 Spring Good Works Team.

The award is presented to athletes in eight sports and focuses on classroom, character, community and competitive achievements. It was first handed out in 2001, and originally, only basketball players were eligible for the award. It has expanded to men's hockey, men's lacrosse, baseball, softball and men's and women's soccer.

This season, Scott has been hitting .286 and has totaled four RBIs and four stolen bases.

Football team adds 3 new coaches

Football coach Ron Prince has filled many of the open positions that arose after the conclusion of the 2007 season.

Jeff Rodgers was hired to replace the special teams coordinator Matt Wallerstedt, who moved to the Air Force, where he will be the assistant head coach and inside linebackers coach.

Rodgers has been with the San Francisco 49ers for the past five seasons and was their assistant special teams coach for the last three years. Prior to that position, he was the special teams quality control coach with the 49ers.

The second addition to the staff is Cornell Jackson, who is also replacing Wallerstedt as linebackers coach. Jackson was the linebackers coach at fellow Big 12 school Baylor in 2007.

Jackson has Kansas roots. He graduated from Sterling Community College and previously was the running backs coach at Butler County Community College.

Also joining the staff is Warren Ruggiero, who moves into the quarterbacks coach position vacated by James Franklin, who left the program to take a coaching job at the University of Maryland. Franklin will be the offensive coordinator and assistant head coach for the Terrapins.

Playoffs for NBA just as enjoyable

About this time every year, college basketball gears up for its grand finale, the NCAA Tournament. Emotions run high and unpredictability runs rampant for three weeks as 65 teams lay everything on the line for a chance to play in the coveted Final Four.

Every year, something exciting happens, whether it is the Florida Gators becoming the first team to repeat as national champions since 1992, or No. 11 seed George Mason making an impromptu run to the Final Four. As exciting as this is the NBA Playoffs are equally as enjoyable, if not more so.

The NBA is a better brand of basketball than that of its amateur counterpart. Every year in June during the NBA draft, 60 players are selected in two rounds out of a field of hundreds. Not only are the top college basketball players competing among themselves to get drafted, but foreign players also enter the draft with hopes of one day playing in the NBA. The best of the best play in the NBA, and the NBA Playoffs showcase these players.

Furthermore, the NBA is built to have the better teams succeed. The eight-team playoff format matches the top 16 teams against each other. The seven-game series format doesn't force teams to play their best every single night. If they have a bad game, they have six more chances to make it up.

Though the better team usually wins, this does not mean the NBA is without parody or surprises. Last year when the Golden State Warriors became the first No. 8 seed to upset a No. 1 seed since the NBA adopted the seven-game series format. The year before, the Dallas Mavericks and the San Antonio Spurs squared off in arguably the most memorable series in NBA history. Six of the seven games in that series literally came down to the last possession. These unforgettable moments wouldn't exist if the NBA had a one-and-done format.

The NBA Finals tragically marked the slogan "Where legends are born." In game six of his rookie season in 1980, Los Angeles Lakers point guard Magic Johnson started at center for an injured Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. He scored 42 points, grabbed 15 rebounds, dished out seven assists and collected three steals.

Two years ago, Dwyane Wade single-handedly won his team to victory four times after dropping the first two games of the NBA Finals to the Dallas Mavericks. His performances in the last four games elevated him to superstar status in the world's greatest basketball league.

Legends are not born in the Final Four. Danny Manning and Christian Laettner were legendary in the Final Four. Marked by short stints with several teams, their professional careers were average at best.

College basketball is excellent. It is fun, dramatic and unpredictable. The NBA is equally as enjoyable, memorable and exciting. True basketball fans can take both and appreciate them for what they are: incredible.

Group aims to explain atheist ideologies, misconceptions

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the heartland of the United States, it is nearly impossible to escape the plethora of different religions and faiths. In Manhattan alone, there are more than 80 churches to tend to the resident's religious convictions. The varieties of religious beliefs and definitions have the potential to overwhelm and even frighten the most devoted of followers.

"I agree that the majority of the world is fairly religious, and that Kansas would fit into that," said Ryan Hayden, senior minister at University Christian Church. "Religion is a structure of thought in which you put your faith. Religion is kind of the easy way out — it's easy to form a set of rules to live by, but it's harder to develop a relationship."

ALTERNATIVE AFFILIATION

With so many opportunities to develop a relationship, some have found an alternative to a lord.

Jo Ann Mooney, resident of Kansas City, Kan., founded a group called the Heartland Humanists, which is based in Kansas City, Kan., and has a chapter at K-State, in September 1999. It all began with an understanding that God could not be the answer to all the glitches life has to offer, she said. Rather than turning to a higher power for support, this group of atheists looks to logic.

"We are atheists with a heart," Mooney said. "We consider ourselves humanists, which means we believe in the community and doing good in the community. We believe in using science and reason to cure our problems. We live an ethical life, and we don't need God to help us."

Though Mooney was raised in faith, she said she never truly felt a sense of belonging. The same is true of many of the members of Heartland Humanists.

"I never personally believed," Mooney said. "I tried to live my faith, and I just felt like I was being a hypocrite the entire time. Most of our members were raised Christian. We have ex-ministers, and as they continued their studies and understood the world better they realized that they couldn't believe any longer."

QUESTIONING FAITH

Mark Killingsworth was one such minister. While attending seminary from 1980 to 1983, Killingsworth, who ministered in Salina for a period of time, learned many lessons through his studies that left him questioning his faith. Still, he continued as a minister until 1990 when he realized he was living a lie.

"The more I found out about the history of religion, I started to find out it was a creation of people," he said. "I didn't feel like I could stay in the profession even though there are a lot of ministers that are more liberal in their thinking than the people in their church because they've studied, as I did, how the Bible was formed, but they still want to be a minister. I couldn't do that because I thought if they knew I had changed in my thinking, they wouldn't be able to look at me as a minister."

Killingsworth said his transformation, though gradual, can be pinpointed to one precise moment in his life. While reading a book titled "Why I Am Not a Christian" by Bertrand Russell, Killingsworth had his final prof-Christiansity argument refuted. Russell questioned those who believe God created the universe and asked, then who created God?

"This is the difference between believers and non-believers," Killingsworth said. "We don't say that we have an answer to that question, but we want to use science and reason and logic to find out what the truth is."

"Even though there is a predominantly Christian nation, it can be traced back to people who started it, and there are other religions who have different explanations for who God is and where we came from. Whatever the answers are, we want to have proof that they're true, not just accept it."

TROUBLE FITTING IN

The life transformation from one with faith to one without can become very trying and complicated. Though Killingsworth still remains close to his family and brother, who still serves as a minister, Mooney said she has seen several incidents in which individuals face an inner turmoil in their lives.

"It can be very hard. Christianity instills this fear of hell, and it's a very powerful fear in people, and to give it up is very hard for people," Mooney said. "We have a support group for people who are leaving the fold. They also can have serious problems with their families; that can be very devastating."

Mooney said one of the greatest conversions she witnessed came while she was visiting her grandmother in a retirement community. A woman in her 80s living in the community sought Mooney out and described her fears about being different because she did not find solace in the Lord.

"She had a fear of being crazy," Mooney said. "She had never been able to tell anyone about her worries, and she was crying on my shoulder because she realized that she wasn't crazy and there was somebody else who actually felt like she felt. That was just so hear-wrenching for me to know that she believed she was insane all of those years."

Even after realizing one's atheist beliefs, many people still have strong feelings against atheists.

"In my life, I have received death threats because of my beliefs," Mooney said. "I am fortunate that I seem to be outspoken, and I am not worried about losing my job, but there are a number of people who are afraid of just that so they 'stay in the closet.'"

Hayden said he has witnessed many atheists return to the church and attempt to re-find the Lord and themselves.

"I've had friends who were atheists who are no longer atheists," he said. "If people are trying to investigate their lives, the most common place to do that is a church. The Bible is God's authoritative word, and we talk about his perspective."

Staunch believers in God often develop several misconceptions about atheists. Killingsworth said many tend to think that atheism is a synonym for unethical or immoral.

"I think that people think we're just hedonists and that we want to have free range to have sex, do drugs and break the law, and it's really not that way at all," Killingsworth said. "We think that morality comes from the Golden Rule, which is found in all cultures. Society needs to have rules to operate and most of the people that I know in the group are concerned about ethics and want to be involved in change for good in the environment and things like that."

SUPPORT FOR HUMANISTS

The Heartland Humanists meet four times a month to socialize and develop a sense of community. Mooney said the four main activities range from an education program to a potluck dinner or movie night. Just like a Christian gathering, the Heartland Humanists meet in a comfortable atmosphere to build relationships with one another.

"I think the main thing people need to understand is that just because you have a faith in God, it doesn't mean you are a good ethical person, and just because you don't have faith in God doesn't mean you are not," Mooney said. "The two are not connected."

Student violinist plays in quartet, prepares for trip to Great Britain

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Robyn Bramlage, junior in fine arts, has been playing her violin for about a decade. She joined a quartet a year and a half ago. She is preparing to go to Great Britain with the K-State Chamber Orchestra this spring break and said she aspires to play in a city symphony.

When did you start playing in the quartet at K-State?

It was fall semester 2006, my sophomore year. We got together because Dr. [Cora] Cooper — a violin professor and the quartet's coach — asked us if we wanted to form a group. We enroll in quartet just like any other class. It's one credit hour. We practice on Tuesdays, and Dr. Cooper coaches us on Thursdays.

[Bramlage's quartet is called The Manhattan Project. Its three other members are Laura Beth Cochran, junior in architecture; Cody Toll, junior in music education; and Ransom Allen, junior in business management.]

Where has your quartet performed?

Radina's is probably our favorite place to play. We play for weddings, luncheons, receptions, and we've played at a public library. Radina's is one of my favorite shows. I think it's because all of our friends get to come to that, which is kind of unique. And they give us free drinks, which is wonderful. It's just a really cool atmosphere. We're playing there at the end of the semester on May 7 ... on my birthday actually.

What is one of your quartet's favorite pieces to play together?

I can't speak for the whole group necessarily, but we have an arrangement of the "Wabash [Cannonball]" that's really fun to play. That's always enjoyable. And Cody's done an arrangement of "Eleanor Rigby" that's fun to play. We like the staple pop tunes. As far as classical pieces, one of my favorites is Dvorak's "American String Quartet" that we played last semester. It's really a staple in string quartet literature.

What do you like best about playing with the quartet or the orchestra?

It's a unique thing to share with each other — making music together. And a quartet is such a relationship with the group. You really have to learn to listen to each other and read each other's signals in order to play music together in a chamber orchestra setting. So the fact that we're all really good friends helps a lot with that.

How long have you been playing the violin?

For 10 years. It sounds so weird to say that. I can't really remember not playing. Well, I guess I can remember the lovely years of fourth and fifth grade when I didn't have to practice.

Is there something about playing the violin that you like most?

I like playing in the orchestra and quartet the most. The friendships I've made over the years ... I was thinking about my close friends, and through most of my life, I've had a lot of close friends that I've met in orchestra. It's a really neat bond to share with people. I think it's cool that it's something you can start playing in grade school, and continue through college. With something like sports, you have a peak period where unless you're going to be super-serious you can't play in college. But it's neat that most of us in the K-State orchestra aren't even music majors, but we can still keep playing. It's not really about the violin itself — it's playing the violin.

And you are going to Great Britain with the orchestra for spring break?

We're going to England and Scotland, and we'll be there for about 10 days. We're paying for the trip by ourselves, but we are receiving some university support from a few donors, and we fundraise at the concerts. This is the first year that we've ever charged admission at the concerts. Usually they're free, but this year there is a suggested donation to help with the trip. We're going through a touring group called Music Celebrations.

Where are you going to play in Great Britain?

We have four different venues where we're playing, so we're kind of doing a little tour, but mostly we're going for fun. We're playing at several churches ... They are places that the touring company has set up.

What are you most excited about for the trip?

Just to get away from school, and I know as a quartet, we're excited to see each other more. This year our schedules haven't lined up very well, and we haven't gotten to see each other as much, so it will be neat to have an entire week to bond again. It will also bring us closer together as an orchestra as a whole. And I've never been out of the country, so I'm just looking forward to the experience. That's probably the part I'm most excited about. I'm excited to observe people and their cultures. It's the experience of getting outside this little Kansas bubble and experiencing the rest of the world [that I'm looking forward to]. Going on a trip with friends is really neat because you're all experiencing something new.

What would you like to do with your major?

I would like to work with a graphic design firm after I get married. Then I would like to stay home with my kids, ideally, if it works out. Then I would like to teach violin lessons. I would love to play in a community orchestra if I can. Something like the Kansas City Symphony would be fun.

Do you plan to encourage your future kids to play an instrument?

I would love for them to take piano lessons. My mom was a piano teacher, and I took piano through fifth grade when I started playing violin, and I wish I hadn't quit. It would have helped me a lot in theory and music theory classes. I'm glad I have a little background in piano, but I would want my kids to play piano. I'm kind of biased towards orchestra, but Brian [Yates, Bramlage's fiancé] is a band kid, so I'm sure he'll try to push band. I'll leave it up to them to decide. I don't want to force them to start before they're ready because I don't want them to quit.

Nick Cave to write a book

As his new album, 'Dig!!! Lazarus, Dig!!!', is set to take its place amongst his finest work, Nick Cave has exclusively revealed to Kfm radio that not only has he completed another screenplay but a new novel is in the pipeline too.

Following the success of his first screenplay, 2006's 'The Proposition' Cave confirmed that he completed another script for the film's director.

"I have written a another one for [John Hillcoat] the director of 'The Proposition' but I don't know when that'll get done. I keep getting asked to do these things but for one reason or another I've been kind of not doing them... but there are certainly things in the pipeline."

When asked if he plans to write another novel — 20 years after the publication of his debut, 'And The Ass Saw The Angel' — Cave replied: "I do, actually, yeah."

Although the singer declined to elaborate as to what the story might be, he said: "I don't want to kind of spook that away but I've definitely been thinking in those terms lately. I just know the way things happen — you get a little idea about something and it then starts to grow and that seems to be happening."

'Nick Cave & The Bad Seeds' 14th studio album, 'Dig!!! Lazarus, Dig!!!' is out now on Mute and the band play a sold-out UK tour in May.

Artist reveals Timberlake sessions were therapeutic

Madonna has revealed she found writing songs with Justin Timberlake therapeutic.

The pop superstar — who turns 50 in August — worked with Justin Timberlake on her upcoming album 'Hard Candy,' and says the sessions were "intimate" and "psychoanalytical."

She said: "I really enjoy writing with Justin. We had psychoanalytic sessions whenever we wrote songs first. That was the only way, because you know, writing together with somebody is very intimate — that was fun because he's open and he's got talent."

"We'd sit down and we'd start talking about situations. And then we'd start talking about issues or problems or relationships with people. We had to find a place to start talking about something we cared about."

"I haven't worked with a lot of songwriters where I'm instantly connected and start riffing and playing with the rhythm of the words. He's as interested in the rhythm of words as the meaning of words."

Madonna also spoke about adopting her son David Banda from Malawi in October 2006 — a decision which caused controversy around the world.

Lisa Marie Presley sues over fat comment

Singer Lisa Marie Presley is suing the UK's Daily Mail for libel over publishing an article alleging she is overweight.

The 40-year-old daughter of Elvis Presley said the story, which was widely republished worldwide, forced her to confirm she is expecting a baby.

Her UK lawyer Simon Smith said claims that she had an "unhealthy appetite" and is "growing like her dad" had left the star "deeply upset and offended".

Graphic novels educate and entertain with comic edge

By Whitney Hodgins

Graphic novels are the lucky medium that can amuse adult readers with both words and illustrations. And if done right, they convey all the imagination without the cheesiness of traditional comic books. This hand-picked list is a sample of underground comic book writers who took full advantage of the creative freedom that graphic novels provided them.

"TRANSMETROPOLITAN" WRITTEN BY WARREN ELLIS, ILLUSTRATED BY DARICK ROBERTSON

Spider Jerusalem is a journalist observing America during an era when the people truly fear their government more than the government fears its people. The text is enough to ignite a patriotism more authentic than current political fodder, but immaculately realistic illustrations will take a reader that much further into the not-so-distant political nightmare. This journalist (based on the late Hunter S. Thompson) takes his job seriously, threatening politicians with "The Truth" and if all else fails, a bowel-disruptor ray gun.

"PERSEPOLIS" BY MARJANE SATRAPI

This autobiographical series about Marjane Satrapi's experience in Iran during the 1979 Iranian Revolution is at once a stark account of a commonly misunderstood culture and a misunderstood teenager. Satrapi offers the world an opportunity to empathize with her point of view as a pacifist Iranian, using hand-drawn black and white illustrations of her memories. It was adapted for a movie which was released in the United States last December, and won an Academy Award for best animated picture.

"THE LOST GIRLS" WRITTEN BY ALAN MOORE, ILLUSTRATED BY MELINDA GEBBIE

The three-volume boxed series is based on adult versions of classic female literary characters in adult situations. Wendy from "Peter Pan," Alice from "Alice in Wonderland," and Dorothy from "The Wizard of Oz" meet and treat each other to stories from their past sex lives. In response to critics who claim the graphic novel is pornographic, Moore and wife, Gebbie, agree in the affirmative, but they argue that while sex pervades society, hardcore erotic art has been inhibited by social taboos. Moore also wrote two graphic novels that were made into movies: "League of Extraordinary Gentlemen," and "V for Vendetta," though he denied having anything to do with the Hollywood versions of his literary endeavors. Another of his graphic novels, "Watchmen," continues to be a strong influence in the genre.

"THE R. CRUMB HANDBOOK" BY R. CRUMB

In terms of graphic novels, Robert Crumb is a style icon. His unapologetic doodlings drew a new path for graphic novels when he emerged in the 1960s. He has illustrated hundreds of covers for magazines, other comic books, full-length comic strips and personal notebooks. He had a bevy of his infamous "Keep on Truckin'" swag produced in his honor. His love of powerful women is a running theme in his expansive collection, which contains many instances of lewd subject matter but also reveals depictions of an imperfect, realistic world of ugliness, beauty, obsession and growth.

"AMERICAN SPLENDOR" WRITTEN BY HARVEY PEKAR, ILLUSTRATED BY R. CRUMB

A perpetually pessimistic Pekar wrote himself into a new genre of graphic novels when he began documenting random insights into his life as a file clerk. His dismal life translated well into witty and self-loathing reflections that entertained readers who identified with him or just pitied the Bohemian super-downer. Crumb illustrated several issues of the series, though different artists lent their hand to Pekar's scowling introspection. A movie of the same name was released in 2003 based on Pekar's career as a cartoonist.

"MAUS: A SURVIVOR'S TALE" BY ART SPIEGELMAN

This cat and mouse story, centered around a Jewish man's plight to survive the Holocaust, received a Pulitzer Prize in 1992 for its depiction of the unimaginable acts of Nazi Germany in World War II. As with George Orwell's novel "Animal Farm," each character is symbolized by an animal representing a different race. In this instance, cats are Nazis and mice are Jews. Unearthing emotions that history books don't touch, Spiegelman humanized the animalistic nature of history and its resounding effects on the next generations.

KING'S KITCHEN

Cook expands on traditional Irish potato, beef recipe

CORNED BEEF AND CABBAGE WITH HORSERADISH MUSTARD SAUCE

INGREDIENTS:

-3 pounds corned beef brisket in brine
-16 cups cold water
-2 bay leaves
-2 teaspoons black peppercorns
-4 whole allspice berries
-2 whole cloves

-1-2 pound medium head green cabbage
-8 red potatoes
-Fresh ground black pepper

HORSERADISH MUSTARD:
-3/4 cup mayonnaise

-3/4 cup sour cream
-1/4 jarred grated horseradish
-2 tablespoons whole grain mustard
-1/2 teaspoon lemon zest
-2teaspoon salt
Ground black pepper

DIRECTIONS:

CORNED BEEF:

To brine the beef brisket, place meat in large stock pot filled with water. Add 2 cups of salt for every gallon of water. Allow meat to soak in the salt water mixture for three to seven days.

When ready to cook, preheat oven to 300 degrees and remove brisket from brine mixture. Place brisket in colander and rinse with cold water. Once rinsed, place brisket in a large Dutch oven with water, bay leaves, black peppercorns, allspice and cloves.

While Dutch oven is uncovered, bring to a boil on top of the stove. Some filmy substance may rise to the surface, which should be removed with a spoon. After bringing the mixture to a boil, cover and make sure the seal is tight. Place covered Dutch oven in oven and cook for 3 hours and 45 minutes.

After cooking is done, transfer corned beef out of Dutch oven and cover tightly with foil. Keep liquid in Dutch oven for vegetables.

Cut cabbage into at least 8 large wedges and potatoes in half; add them to the liquid in the Dutch oven.

Simmer vegetables for 20 minutes or until the potatoes are cooked. Put potatoes and cabbage in large bowl and cover with foil.

To cut corned beef, remove from foil and cut across the grain of the meat into thin slices. Serve with cabbage and potatoes; sprinkle with fresh black pepper for flavor oand add Horseradish whole grain mustard sauce.

WHOLEGRAIN HORSERADISH MUSTARD SAUCE:

Stir all ingredients together in a small bowl with a spatula until completely mixed. Refrigerate for at least 30 minutes before serving.

Halfway through February, I begin to get a little extra spring in my step and a song in my heart. No, I am not excited for spring, but rather one of my favorite holidays - St. Patrick's Day.

Dressed in Irish gear from head to toe, I crank the bagpipes at 6:30 a.m. Let's just say my family and roommates hate me for a few hours. Guinness flows into my veins as I consume all different types of Irish foods.

Many believe Irish food is nothing more than potatoes, and they would be correct however, most people know how to make a good baked potato. There are two other staples of Irish cooking that I will present this week: corned beef and cabbage with a horseradish mustard sauce and Irish soda bread.

IRISH SODA BREAD

INGREDIENTS:

-2 cups all-purpose flour
-2 tablespoons sugar
-1 teaspoon baking powder

-1 teaspoon baking soda
-4 tablespoons butter, softened and divided

-1/2 teaspoon salt
-1/2 cup seedless raisins
-1 cup buttermilk

DIRECTIONS:

Preheat oven to 375 degrees and grease a small baking sheet with cooking spray; set aside. Place first five ingredients in large sifter and sift over a large bowl. With a pastry blender or fork, cut three tablespoons of softened butter into the flour mix until mixture looks like fine crumbs. Add raisins and toss until they are completely incorporated.

After raisins have been placed into the mixture, add buttermilk into flour mixture and toss with a fork until dry ingredients are moistened. Be sure to not stir too much because it will make the bread too firm.

Gather dough and place on a lightly floured cutting board. Knead until dough is smooth. Shape into a ball, and place on the greased baking sheet. Flatten dough until it is one and a half inches thick.

Now it is time to bless the bread by cutting a large cross into the bread with a floured knife halfway through the dough. With the remaining one tablespoon of butter, melt and brush over the top of dough. Bake for 30 minutes or until top is golden brown. Remove bread and place on a wire cooling rack until ready to eat.

AIRPORT | Air travel to expand to jet services by end of year

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan airport is considering expanding its service to include more commercial flights in and out of Manhattan.

the city of Manhattan's Web site, Great Lakes will expand flight services to Kansas City. There will be three flights a day to Kansas City, seven days a week starting March 30. Mesa only provided three flights per day five days per week with the previous contract.

Great Lakes will add two flights to Denver every day as well.

Strawn said the change of providers is not the only expansion at the Manhattan airport.

"There is a way, way bigger story in the ability of the airport to attract jet service," he said.

"The state of Kansas currently has legislation pending that will assist Manhattan in attracting a regional jet carrier into our airport," Strawn said. "Essentially the state is going to underwrite the revenue of that airline by $1 million per year in subsidy payments."

Strawn said the legislation is being completed during this legislative session and should be voted on by June. Strawn said he thinks there will be a jet service running by the end of 2008.

He said the regional jet service out of Manhattan would fly to the Dallas/Fort Worth area or Chicago.

Strawn said the jet service is necessary to attract the National Bio- and Agro-Defense Facility.

There will not be any immediate changes to the airport or any of the facilities, but a restaurant and a few hangers might be added in the future, based on need, Strawn said.

A big draw for people using the Manhattan airport is free parking and less money spent on gas, Strawn said. The city does not plan to change the free parking even when the airport gets jet service, he said.

Students should tailor workout before breaks

It's that time of year when thoughts of warmer weather are tormented by the reality of 25-degree temperatures. I don't know how many times in the last month I've said, "I wish it was summer."

However, I'm not physically prepared for bikini season quite yet.

Many students, like myself, have various fitness goals in mind right now. Whether it's losing those last three pounds before spring break or toning your beach body before summer, here are some strategies to help reach your goals.

The spring-break light is now at the end of a tunnel, but your beer gut might be blocking the rays. At this point, be honest with yourself. Your fitness goals should only be two pounds a week.

In order to maximize your downsize, you need to hit cardio hard and eat better. If you can stand sweating it out on the elliptical for an hour every day, do it. If not, do what you can — every little bit counts. Trying to build muscle mass this late in the game is pretty futile, but if you can cut your body fat a little, the muscle you do have will show.

Eating right is also important. You can cut about 500 calories from your diet each day and still be healthy. You might be cranky, but you need to decide what your idea of looking good is and how important it is for your vacation. You should know whether your biggest downfall is portion size or junk-food control. Try writing down everything you eat, with the serving size and calories; for the time period you are trying to lose weight. This habit will help you stay mindful of your intake and make you less likely to snack on extras. I also recommend getting a nutrition analysis done. This lets a nutrition professional give you specific tips and guidelines on where to change your diet to meet your goals.

If you have a couple of months to work out, you should do the same activities in smaller doses since you have the chance to lose more weight and build more muscle. However, you should still incorporate extensive cardio into your routine if weight loss is your main priority.

Start by writing down a goal that is realistic yet challenging for you. For example, if you haven't seen your tennis shoes since last September, then an hour of cardio four days a week might be too much to begin with. Start small, and add intensity and duration as you go.

Incorporating strength training is also important because it will build muscle as well as burn calories. Personal trainers can develop a program for you based on your goals, or if you know the basics of weight training, you can design something on your own.

Remember, the rule to losing weight is pretty simple: Move more, eat less. While setting your goals in increments is the best way to tackle a large fitness plan, sometimes it's just not realistic with our lifestyles. Keep in mind that in order to maintain a healthy weight, regular diet and exercise are still vitally important.

over the right-field wall for his third home run of the year and the Wildcats never trailed again in this game. Prior to Tuesday night's trip to Manhattan, Ratigan was 3-0 with a 0.00 ERA during the 2008 season.

Jurica hit another home run of the game with another blast over the left-field wall, this one coming off of Cougar reliever Conner Lambert. The K-State bullpen took over from this point in the game, striking out seven Cougars over the next four innings, and not allowing a hit, with only one base runner. Freshman pitcher Justin Aragon pitched two perfect innings for the Wildcats on a day when offense was at a premium, including two strike-outs.

Biery hit a home run in the fifth inning, the fourth for K-State on the night, in the midst of a two-out rally that produced four hits and three runs. Junior catcher Rob Vaughn also doubled and added an RBI to his sheet by bringing home freshman Jason King during that rally. At the end of five, the score was K-State 9,

Washington State 4.

Washington State did put up one final effort in the eighth inning, when they were able to grind out a couple of runs. Picking up their first hit since the third inning, Murphy doubled into deep left and was then singled home by Prince. After a strikeout and another single, Prince crossed home after teammate Scott Suttmeier singled into right centerfield.

After recording the final out of the eighth inning, K-State coach Brad Hill called on senior closer Daniel Edwards to finish the game. Edwards struck out one en route to his fifth save of the year, almost halfway to his total of eleven in the 2007 campaign.

Four Wildcats had multiple hit games Tuesday night, but Biery was the best behind the plate, going 2-2 with a double, a home run, four RBI's, two walks, and a run for the Wildcats.

K-State improves to 7-6 on the year while Washington State falls to 10-3. Big 12 Conference powerhouse Nebraska comes to Manhattan this weekend for a three-game series kicking off at 6:30 p.m. Friday at Tointon Family Stadium.

CENTER | Student introduces new recycling plan

than 800 square feet of space and is in need of repair. Its funding comes from the custodial general budget.

K-STATE COMPARED TO OTHER BIG 12 UNIVERSITIES

Of the Big 12 universities that Thorsell researched, the University of Texas, the University of Colorado, and the University of Kansas have top-ranked facilities with feasible operation situations similar to K-State's.

KU's recycling director said KU earns about $50,000 in revenue per year by auctioning its recyclables to the highest bidder in the state, according to Thorsell's proposal. KU collects about $202,000 per year from students — which amounts to $3.75 per student per semester — to fund its three recycling buildings. The university purchased a baler and conveyor in 2006 with $66,782 from the Solid Waste Competitive Plan Implementation Grant Awards. KU's recycling program employs one full-time administrator, three full-time skilled trade workers, and 10 students.

Colorado's non-profit program recycles the most in the Big 12, and its student population is only 10 to 20 percent larger than K-State's — about the same as KU's population. The university recycled 1,250 tons of goods campus-wide and earned $85,000 in revenue last year. The program's 31 student employees provide most of the labor and can earn academic credit for their work, Jack Debell, Colorado's recycling director, said, as documented in Thorsell's proposal.

Colorado students invest $192,000 each year in their recycling program, which amounts to $3.40 per student per semester. The administration covers the remaining costs. Colorado saves an annual $500,000 in disposal cost through its recycling program, and has a net savings of $235,000. It diverts about 35-40 percent of its waste into composting and recycling.

Thorsell said recycling programs like Colorado's and KU's work well because they have comprehensive plans — the university knows what it will be doing several years down the road.

"The main point is to have a plan," Thorsell said. "Before you have a facility, you need to have a strategy on campus for how you're going to use it."

A NEW PLAN

Since the current overhaul of K-State's recycling program is still a new idea, Woods said he does not yet have a comprehensive plan.

"We are now in the process of making plans for this facility," Woods said.

Woods said the university has started expanding the recycling program through grant money from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. Several years ago, the university bought two trailers for recyclables at Jardine and the football stadium. Woods said he plans to apply for more grants as soon as they become available.

In 2006, K-State received money from the city/university fund to buy a $70,000 truck to transport recyclables and is now purchasing $36,000 worth of large containers to collect recyclables from the new desk-side containers.

Rawson said the university will receive a down-payment of $106,100 in 2009, which will be used to design the facility. He said the new program will help avoid the cost of taking waste to the landfill, and it will increase revenue. K-State will be able to better sort and bale recyclables to auction them off.

"All in all, it's well worth the effort," Rawson said.

In the executive summary of his recycling program proposal, Thorsell stated obtainable goals for K-State's "fresh start." Thorsell suggested that K-State's recycling program separate from the facilities department and become a nonprofit organization called "Recycling and Waste Minimization Program." Under the proposed system, an administrative manager would oversee student volunteers. This program is similar to Colorado's recycling program.

Woods said one K-State employee is currently in charge of recycling for the entire campus. However, he said he would gladly hire any students who were interested.

Thorsell also suggested that the major student organizations work together to expand the recycling program. The Association of Residence Halls would have a structured system within the residence halls and Jardine Apartments, according to the proposal.

Rawson said he sees the new program stretching across the entire campus, including residence halls, Jardine and possibly parts of the city and greek housing.

"We'll see how it evolves," Rawson said.

Thorsell proposed the campus program provide fraternities and sororities with curb-side recycling. He also suggested placing recycling bins in easily accessible areas in each campus building.

Thorsell said the original recycling goals established in 2001 need to be redeveloped, and the campus needs to have a comprehensive strategy for achieving them.

"I think we're off and running on how to operate the thing — it's just getting the [building] built," Rawson said.

BINS | Success relies on using proper bins

recycling centers on the ground floors of most of the buildings. Woods said it is important to only put recycled items in these bins in order to maintain a successful recycling program.

"If they use them as trash, it creates problems for us," he said. "It's then not sorted and it becomes trash, which cannot be recycled."

Woods said the new bins will help produce a much larger amount of recycling material. Whatever objects students, faculty and staff throw away, it can be recycled, which is the ultimate goal, he said.

Woods has worked with Thorsell on the recycling issue and said his efforts to revamp the recycling program on campus has captured the attention of administrators. Woods said administrators were probably aware of the issue before, but there's a difference when a student raises the concern.

In response, Thorsell said he is pleased administrators like Woods, have been receptive and open to change and improvement.

"I'm just thankful that our administrators take time out of their busy days to sit down with students and listen to them," Thorsell said. "We are very fortunate, and I think if I would have done this two years ago, their reaction would have been no different."

Sprint Center provides new venue for Big 12 tournament

By Wendy Haun

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new Kansas City, Mo., district, Power and Light, will be tested this week as teams and fans from the farthest reaches of the Big 12 Conference will visit the downtown area.

With the Sprint Center construction – which was completed Oct. 10, 2007 – multiple new businesses moved into the area. Thirteen new restaurants opened their doors and several big-name artists have performed at the Sprint Center since its opening, including Elton John, Garth Brooks and Hannah Montana.

This year's Big 12 Tournament will have a test run through Kansas City. Next year the tournament will return to Oklahoma City's Ford Center, but the Sprint Center has been tapped to play host to the tournament in 2010 and 2011. The entire purpose of the facility was to replace Kemper Arena, which has become outdated, said Shani Tate-Ross, director of communications and marketing for the Sprint Center.

"The Sprint Center was constructed because Kansas City needed an up-to-date arena," Tate-Ross said. "The technology has changed, as well as amenities. Kansas City voters decided in Aug. 2004 to build a new arena for the region."

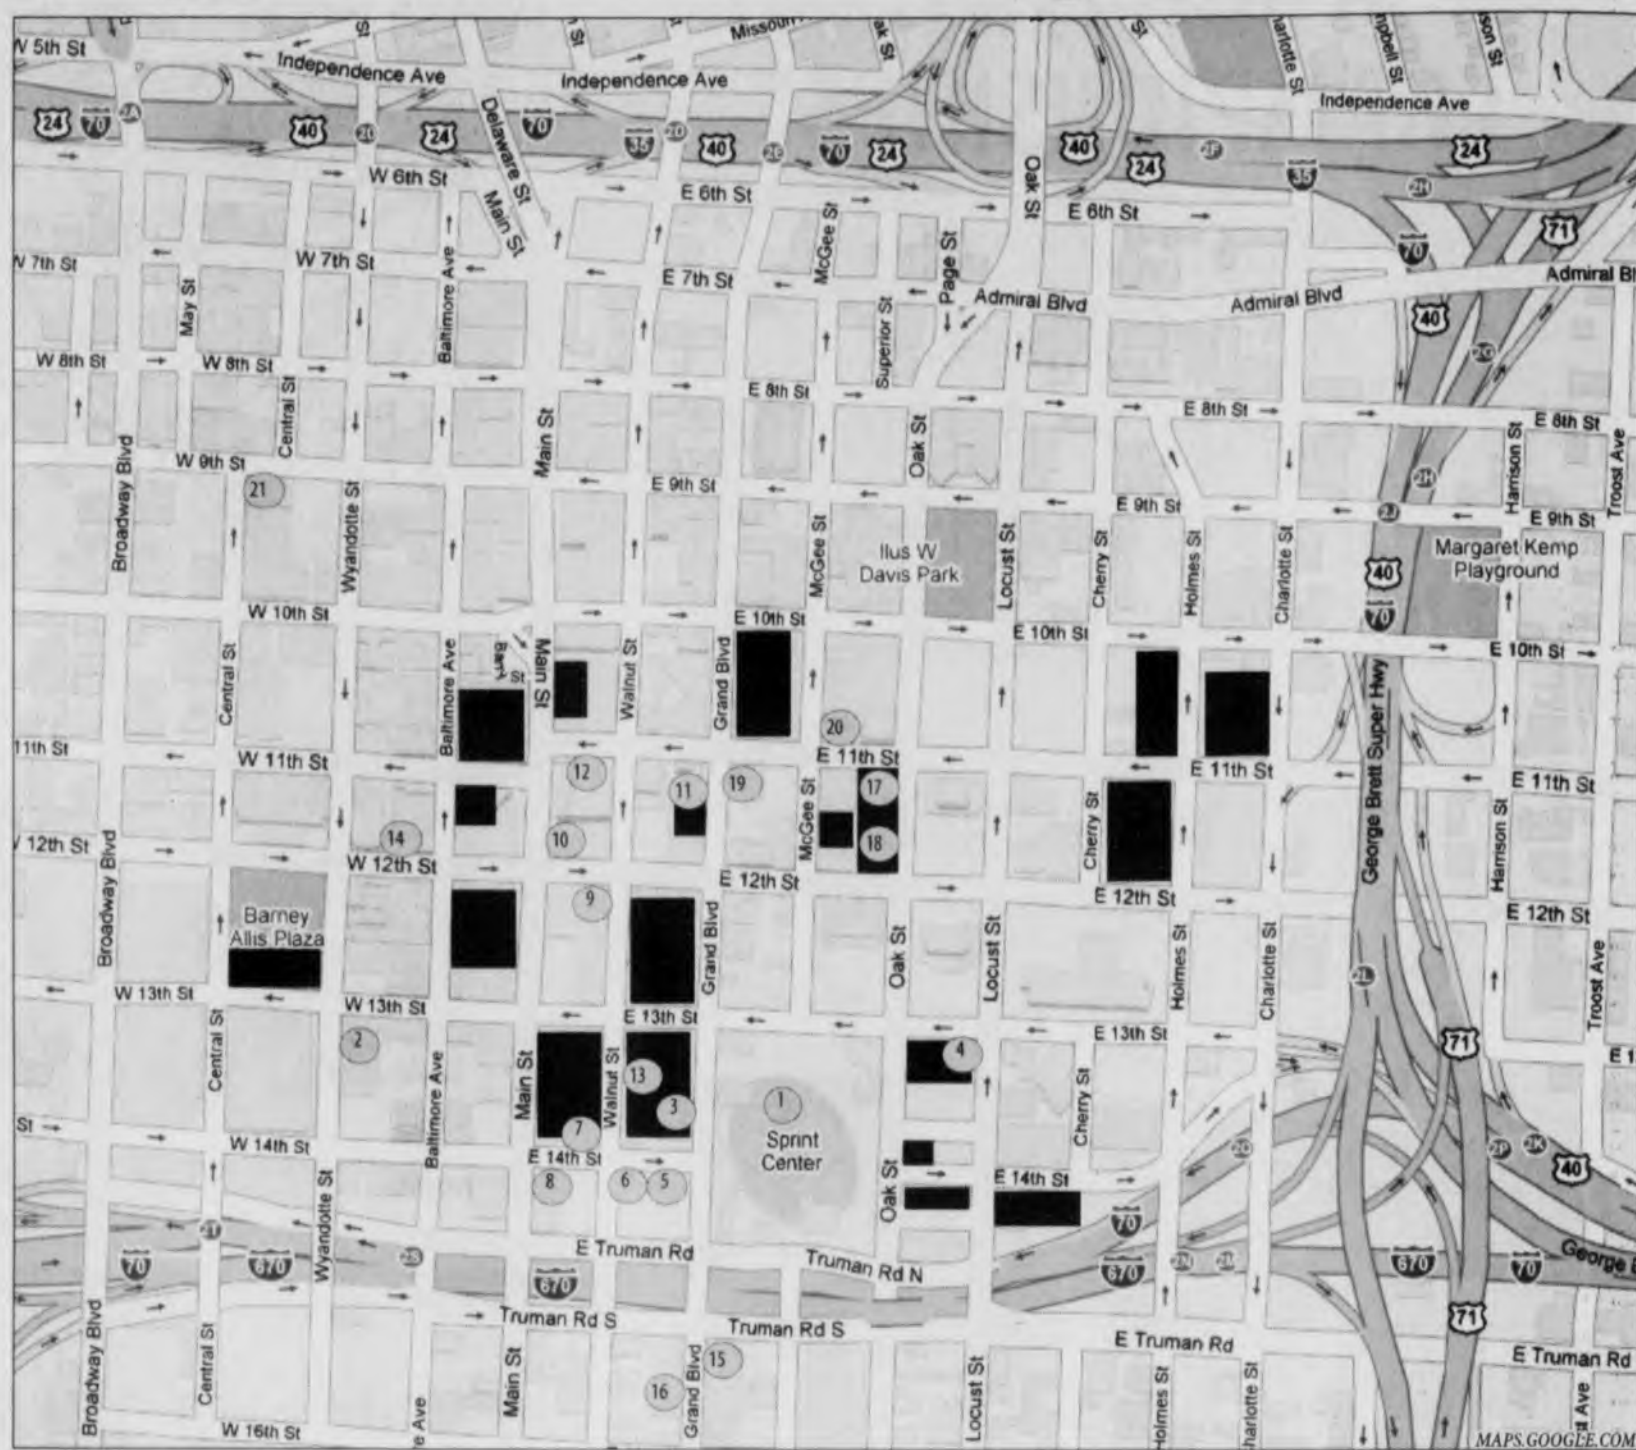

Tate-Ross said the Sprint Center's location was chosen because of the proximity to several basketball conferences, as well as to Lawrence, where the game was invented.

"It has a great location and access in terms of being a centralized location for several of the schools in the Big 12," she said.

One of the main attractions is the College Basketball Experience, which is in a building joined to the Sprint Center. It is described on its Web site, www.collegebasketballexperience.com, as a "41,500 square foot facility with two floors of the most unique and entertaining private function space in Kansas City." It includes the National Collegiate Basketball Hall of Fame.

"Those throughout the region who haven't had the opportunity to visit will see what a great facility it is," Tate-Ross said. "It's interactive and educational as well. It'll be jam-packed."

In order to prepare for the tournament, the Sprint Center employees have had to work

WORST to FIRST

K-State becomes only team in Big 12 history to go from bottom to No. 1 seed

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the Baylor Bears losing to Oklahoma State last Thursday, 72-68, the K-State women's basketball team achieved something no squad in Big 12 women's basketball had ever done — go from worst to first in one year.

"It's a great feeling," said senior guard Kimberly Dietz. "We have great talent and we worked hard this year."

Dietz said she doesn't believe what people say when they think K-State was truly the worst team in the conference just a year ago.

"We fought hard last year, we just didn't finish," Dietz said. "I don't think we were the worst team last year because we have the same players."

A player who might have been a big contributor to K-State's demise a year ago was junior forward Marlies Gipson.

A knee injury ended her season with 18 games to go, but for her and the rest of the Wildcats, the end of this year had a much better feel to it.

"This definitely shows the hard work we put in," Gipson said. "We just kept fighting."

She was on the bench when her teammates were struggling last year, but this season was a complete turnaround, as she was able to help K-State earn a conference championship.

"It was hard watching and not being able to play last year," Gipson said. "It's a blessing to be able to play this year."

K-State finished as the worst team in the conference last year but played well in the Women's NIT. Junior guard Shalee Lehning said she believes the worst teams in the conference could handle themselves in the big dance.

"I would take the worst teams in the Big 12 into the NCAA and they would win," Lehning said. "Last year, we were searching for our roles because when you lose a player you have to adjust."

The Wildcats didn't have to make the drastic adjustments because of injuries this year like they did last season, which Lehning said proves how crucial injuries to star players can affect a team's success.

"It's amazing how one player can make a difference," Lehning said. There's just an extra comfort level when Marlies is on the floor."

The K-State players might not like the label of being the worst team in the Big 12 last year, but it did happen. They weren't picked to be a contender for the title this year, either.

K-State was predicted to finish eighth in the preseason poll.

The Wildcats were able to prove they could fight adversity and win, something coach Deb Patterson said she admires about the team.

"Their legacy is as strong as any team I've ever coached," Patterson said. "Winning a championship at this level can take athletes their whole careers, and our team did it in one year."

Men's Big 12 Conference Tournament bracket

THURSDAY

SATURDAY

SUNDAY

8. Texas Tech — Overall Record: 16-14 Big 12 Record: 7-9 Last 10: 4-6

Best win: vs. Texas Worst loss: at Centenary

Reason to hope: The Red Raiders have played a schedule that is the third toughest in the country. Senior Martin Zeno provides experience and should help them heading into the tournament.

Reason to mope: They have been inconsistent. After beating Texas, they went on the road to Kansas and lost 109-51.

Outlook: Tech will play Oklahoma State on Thursday. They have split in their previous match-ups.

9. Oklahoma State — Overall Record: 16-14 Big 12 Record: 7-9 Last 10: 6-4

Best win: vs. Kansas Worst loss: at North Texas

Reason to hope: The Cowboys got off to a poor start to the season but have finished strong, defeating Baylor, Texas A&M and KU and at one point winning five in a row.

Reason to mope: They have lost to a lot of teams they shouldn't have in nonconference and in conference play.

Outlook: If junior point guard Byron Eaton can continue to play well, then the Cowboys can make some noise. The Cowboys and Red Raiders have split in previous match-ups.

5. Baylor — Overall Record: 21-9 Big 12 Record: 9-7 Last 10: 5-5

Best win: vs. Notre Dame Worst loss: at Oklahoma State

Reason to hope: Baylor shoots the 3-pointer so well that they have the ability to come back from any deficit in a game.

Reason to mope: The Bears lack a big presence in the paint. They depend heavily on the 3-point shot and will have trouble against teams with a good big man.

Outlook: Look for the Bears to beat Colorado in the first-round. They will face an Oklahoma team in the second-round that has beaten them both times in regular-season play.

12. Colorado — Overall record: 11-19 Big 12 record: 3-13 Last 10: 2-8

Best win: vs. Oklahoma Worst loss: New Orleans

Reason to hope: Coach Jeff Bzdelik has his team playing hard, only losing at K-State by six points. Richard Roby is their go-to guy, averaging 16 points per game.

Reason to mope: The Buffaloes lack depth and have no one that can score the ball inside.

Outlook: Look for an early round exit as they face a run-and-gun Baylor team Thursday.

7. Nebraska — Overall record: 18-11 Big 12 record: 7-9 Last 10: 5-5

Best win: vs. K-State Worst loss: at Colorado

Reason to hope: The Huskers got off to a 0-4 start in conference play, but rebounded and have gained some quality wins, finishing 7-5 in their last 12 games.

Reason to mope: They lost to the three worst teams in the Big 12, costing them an opportunity to finish in the upper-half of the conference.

Outlook: Nebraska will face Missouri on Thursday. They have split in previous games.

10. Missouri — Overall record: 16-15 Big 12 record: 6-10 Last 10: 4-6

Best win: vs. Texas Worst loss: vs. Illinois

Reason to hope: The Tigers are a well-balanced scoring team, which bodes well for them.

Reason to mope: Losing starting point guard Steffon Hannah hurt. It's debatable where they would be if the last year's Big XII Newcomer of the Year was still on the team.

Outlook: Nebraska will face Missouri on Thursday. They have split in previous games.

6. Texas A&M — Overall record: 22-9 Big 12 record: 8-8 Last 10: 5-5

Best win: vs. K-State Worst loss: vs. Nebraska

Reason to hope: The Aggies have one of the biggest frontlines in the Big 12, and it should do them well if they match-up against teams with other big men.

Reason to mope: They have been very inconsistent. They started the year 15-1 and ranked in the top 10, but they have since gone 7-8.

Outlook: If they can play consistent the Aggies can make a run. (A&M defeated Iowa State 69-51 in Ames, Iowa, earlier this year.)

11. Iowa State — Overall Record: 14-17 Big 12 Record: 4-12 Last 10: 1-9

Best win: vs. Purdue Worst loss: at Colorado

Reason to hope: They have a very-talented duo with sophomore Wesley Johnson, and freshman Craig Brackins, both averaging double-figures.

Reason to mope: They have been unable to finish close games, and have struggled in their last 10 games.

Outlook: They face Texas A&M Thursday. A&M won the previous match-up this year 69-51 in Ames, Iowa.

Tough schedule will benefit young Wildcats in NCAA bids

With the NCAA set to commence its annual tournament in less than two weeks, 65 teams will go into the Big Dance with the hope that all of their regular season success will pay off, as they attempt to make a run at the Final Four. Some teams rely on experience, while other teams rely on a tough schedule. And others simply rely on talent alone.

JONATHAN WRIGHT

nois 77-64, the Wildcats began a grueling 18-day stretch that involved two tournaments and seven games. Not only did the quick turnaround between games help simulate an NCAA Tournament atmosphere, but several of K-State's opponents are quality teams that will join K-State during March Madness.

Although K-State didn't win many of these contests, by simply playing Oregon, Notre Dame, George Mason and California, K-State got a first-hand view of what it takes to be an NCAA Tournament team.

After defeating Winston-Salem State and Wagner, the Wildcats traveled to Cincinnati for its toughest test during the non-conference schedule against Xavier before concluding with Savannah State.

The non-conference schedule produced 10 wins for the Wildcats, including one against a then-undefeated California team, and only four losses.

CONFERENCE SCHEDULE

Each year, a huge factor in deciding the tournament field is the Rating Percentage Index (RPI), which basically combines a team's winning percentage, its opponents' average winning percentage and its opponents' opponents' winning percentage to get an overall number for each college basketball team. The same is done for conferences.

The Big 12 Conference has the second highest RPI of 0.5703, just behind the Atlantic Coast Conference at 0.5776. This makes the Big 12 the second-strongest conference in basketball, virtually guaranteeing it at least five teams in the NCAA Tournament. This year, it looks like six teams will get in. All K-State really had to do was pick up some quality wins and finish in the top five or six.

The Wildcats did more than that. Not only did K-State finish 10-6 and earn third place in the Big 12, but the Wildcats picked up several quality résumé wins — Oklahoma, Texas A&M and KU — to supplement its strong non-conference schedule. Saturday's win at Iowa State essentially guaranteed the K-State its first berth in the Big Dance since 1996.

By playing against and having success in the second-toughest conference in the NCAA, the freshman-heavy Wildcats got to experience the best that college basketball has to offer night-in and night-out giving them the intangibles necessary to make a serious run in the tournament.

With a No. 19-ranked strength of schedule, a team RPI of 42 and quality wins over four tournament teams, it's hard to say that the Wildcats won't do well in the NCAA Tournament. Although remarkably inconsistent, this year's team is tremendously talented and is now battle-tested. Every year in the parody that is March Madness, a Cinderella team always rises above expectations and makes a deep run, and this year just might be the Wildcats' turn.

Jonathan Wright is a senior in print journalism. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

Focus, next wins important for K-State to extend season into March Madness

The 16-round fight might be over for the Wildcats, but what will ultimately determine the success of this team lies ahead. Frank Martin's Big 12 Conference season strategy — that the next game is the most important game on your schedule — has served its purpose of keeping this young basketball team focused on the task at hand.

JOE BERGKAMP

for the Wildcats to stay focused because being a No. 3 seed places a bull's eye on their backs. With the congestion of the middle of the Big 12 standings, it will also be important for the Wildcats to approach these games as they have all year. As it stands right now, the Wildcats will match up against the winner between Texas A&M and Iowa State.

Earlier this season, K-State easily took care of business with the Aggies, cruising to a 20-point blow-out victory at home. The alternative is a rematch with a team that just gave the Wildcats everything they could handle this past Saturday.

The Cyclones might be struggling this season, but it still has players who could pose problems for the Wildcats if the business-like approach is abandoned. Either way, the Wildcats are in for a tough weekend, which could either help their NCAA tournament stock or seal their fate of another disappointing postseason. A good performance this weekend could improve K-State's seeding, possibly all the way up to a No. 4 seed.

With senior guards Clint Stewart and Blake Young leading the team, it has been helpful for the lineup, which includes three to four freshmen on the court at nearly any given time. Martin has had to rely heavily on his senior leaders to help guide the young team, and there are no signs that the situation will be any different this weekend.

It will be important for K-State to use the same approach for the Big 12 Tournament that they have used throughout the season. In NCAA basketball, the month of March is known for its Cinderella stories, so it will be important for K-State to keep track of and stay on top of opponents.

Joe Bergkamp is a senior in marketing. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

TUESDAY

8. Iowa State — Overall Record: 18-11 Big 12 Record: 7-9 Last 10: 5-5

Best win: at Oklahoma State Worst loss: at Kansas

Reason to hope: With a win or two in the Big 12 tournament, the Cyclones could lock up a bid for the NCAA tournament.

Reason to mope: They have struggled to win several close games.

Outlook: They will face Colorado on Tuesday; they are 2-0 against the Buffaloes. The winner will play K-State on Wednesday.

9. Colorado — Overall Record: 16-13 Big 12 Record: 5-11 Last 10: 3-7

Best win: vs. K-State Worst loss: at Kansas

Reason to hope: All-Big 12 first-team player Jackie McFarland gives them a great presence down-low.

Reason to mope: The Buffaloes started out the year 12-2, but since then have gone 4-11.

Outlook: They will face Iowa State, a team they are 0-2 against this season. The winner will play K-State in the quarterfinals.

5. Oklahoma — Overall Record: 21-7 Big 12 Record: 11-5 Last 10: 7-3

Best win: at K-State Worst loss: Texas

Reason to hope: The Sooners will always have a chance at winning when they have the Paris twins playing well. They have played an extremely tough schedule to prepare them for March.

Reason to mope: Oklahoma was a favorite to finish near the top of the Big 12 and receive a bye. They have not quite met the expectation that was placed on them early in the season.

Outlook: Oklahoma will play Missouri, a team they beat in Columbia 64-57 earlier this year.

12. Missouri — Overall record: 9-20 Big 12 record: 2-14 Last 10: 1-9

Best win: Kansas Worst loss: South Dakota State

Reason to hope: The Tigers are a very young team and have a potentially bright few seasons ahead.

Reason to mope: Missouri has struggled to find wins this season and have really had a tough time down the stretch.

Outlook: They will play Oklahoma on Tuesday. Missouri lost to the Sooners earlier this season 64-57.

7. Texas — Overall record: 19-11 Big 12 record: 7-9 Last 10: 4-6

Best win: Baylor Worst loss: at Texas Tech

Reason to hope: The Longhorns have beaten some two of the top teams in the Big 12. They have good depth and they are always tough to beat in the postseason.

Reason to mope: They have lost to some of the worst teams of the Big 12, which is the reason they are sitting so low in the conference.

Outlook: The Horns will face off against Texas Tech in the first round of the tournament. They have split in their previous match-ups this year.

10. Texas Tech — Overall record: 16-14 Big 12 record: 4-12 Last 10: 2-8

Best win: vs. Texas Worst loss: at Missouri

Reason to hope: The Red Raiders were very young this year and have a promising future. They are led by Big 12 Newcomer of the Year Dominic Seals.

Reason to mope: Tech started the year 12-1, but lost 13 of their last 17 games.

Outlook: They will square off against Texas in the first-round. The two teams have split in their previous match-ups this season.

6. Nebraska — Overall record: 20-10 Big 12 record: 9-7 Last 10: 5-5

Best win: Texas A&M Worst loss: at Kansas

Reason to hope: The Cornhuskers have beaten a couple of the Big 12's best teams and are likely to be headed to the NCAA tournament.

Reason to mope: The Huskers have suffered some losses against teams they shouldn't have beaten and have struggled a little down the stretch.

Outlook: They will play Kansas in the first round. They have split in their previous match-ups.

11. Kansas — Overall Record: 15-14 Big 12 Record: 4-12 Last 10: 3-7

Best win: at Xavier Worst loss: at Missouri

Reason to hope: They are led by Canadian Krysten Boogaard, a member of the Big 12 All-Rookie Team. The Jayhawks have some talent, but haven't put it all-together.

Reason to mope: They began the season 11-2, but since then have gone 4-12.

Outlook: They will play Nebraska, who they are 1-1 against. The winner of that game will play Oklahoma State.

WEDNESDAY

THURSDAY

FRIDAY

IOWA STATE, 76-50

1. K-State — Overall Record: 21-8 Big 12 Record: 13-3 Last 10: 7-3

Best win: at Texas A&M Worst loss: at Colorado

Reason to hope: The Wildcats have superb guard-play with All-Big 12 First-Team players Shalee Lehning and Kimberly Dietz. After starting the season 5-5, they have gone 16-3 in their last 19 games.

Reason to mope: They struggled against their non-conference schedule, which may cost them in the seeding of the NCAA tournament.

Outlook: They will play Wednesday against the winner of Iowa State vs. Colorado. They are 3-1 against the two teams.

WINNER

4. Texas A&M — Overall Record: 23-7 Big 12 Record: 11-5 Last 10: 9-1

Best win: Baylor Worst loss: at Nebraska

Reason to hope: The preseason-pick to win the Big 12, A&M is playing their best basketball of the season, winning six in a row.

Reason to mope: The Aggies got off to a bad start in conference play, dropping four of their first five, which cost them any hope of meeting the expectations.

Outlook: The Aggies will receive a bye in the first-round and play the winner of Oklahoma vs. Missouri.

WINNER

2. Baylor — Overall Record: 24-5 Big 12 Record: 12-4 Last 10: 6-4

Best win: at Oklahoma Worst loss: at Texas

Reason to hope: The Bears have played a very tough schedule and have prepared themselves for the teams they will see in March.

Reason to mope: The Bears missed an opportunity to share the Big XII title, losing to Oklahoma State on their home court, and they have lost four of their last eight games.

Outlook: Baylor will play the winner of Texas vs. Texas Tech after their bye. They are 1-1 against Texas, and 2-0 against Texas Tech.

WINNER

3. Oklahoma State — Overall Record: 23-6 Big 12 Record: 11-5 Last 10: 7-3

Best win: at Baylor Worst loss: Iowa

Reason to hope: Led by All-Big 12 guard Andrea Riley, the Cowgirls will win most shootouts.

Reason to mope: They dropped two games on their home-court which they should have won.

Outlook: OSU will play the winner of Nebraska vs. KU after their bye. Oklahoma State has defeated both teams in their previous games.

SPRINT CENTER | K-State, Kansas coaches looking forward to playing at new Kansas City venue

around the clock to turn it over from the center's last event Sunday - a Professional Bullriders Association-sanctioned event. Crews had to not only clean the stands, but remove the dirt and place the basketball floor.

The arena isn't the only thing that is going through massive preparations leading up the tournament. According to an article in The Kansas City Star, the city was to provide 764 parking spaces, but a garage that will add 770 will not be completed in time. However, there will be shuttles to the Sprint Center from hotels, Kemper Arena and through the public transportation system.

There also might be snags when it comes to driving through the area. According to The Star, the city plans to close Grand Boulevard from 13th Street to Truman Road from March 12 through March 16.

Kansas City was the host city of the Big 12 Tournament when it was at Kemper Arena from 1997 through 2002 and then again in 2005. Other locations for the tournament have been at the American Airlines Center in Dallas. However, Kansas coach Bill Self said having the tournament close to home will be beneficial to his team.

"I think it's going to be the best it's been this year," Self said. "I thought they did a fabulous job last year in Oklahoma City. The interest level was there, the crowds, the women participating next to the men ... You get all the fans from the respective schools. Everybody's crossing paths everywhere you go. I think it's a lot of fun for the fans."

K-State has a major leg up on most of the teams competing in the conference. K-State and Kansas are the only two teams who have competed at the Sprint Center. Kansas beat Ohio, 88-51, Dec. 15, while K-State beat Florida A&M, 87-60, Dec. 17.

"Not only is it a benefit for us, basketball-wise, because we got to practice here, but we got to play a game and win," coach Frank Martin said. "To gain confidence as a team when you know you've won on that court, it's easier to go back in there and win again."

Gospel concert to promote unity

By David Griffin Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Workers Of Wisdom Christian ministries at K-State are promoting unity through the word of Christ with a free musical concert tonight.

The concert, "One Night for the King," will be at 7 to-night at College Avenue United Methodist Church, 1609 College Ave. Tony Evans of Oak Cliff Bible Fellowship will be the key speaker at the concert.

Evans has served as an associate professor in the Pastoral Ministries Department of Dallas Theological Seminary in the areas of evangelism, homiletics and black church studies. He also served as chaplain for the Dallas Cowboys and presently serves as chaplain for the Dallas Mavericks, said Jahelle Rhone, junior in business Students often have the feeling that domestic and international students consistently fail to come together as a single K-State community.

Many American, international students fail to interact

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the first articles in a four-part series investigating the disconnect among certain student demographics on campus.

K-State is home to students from all over the world, giving American students easy access to a variety of cultures. However, some on campus said they think domestic and international students consistently fail to come together as a single K-State community.

Daniel Aguilar, doctoral student in sociology, said the concerns about the lack of communication between domestic and international students led him to question the student government presidential candidates regarding their views on the international community at K-State, prior to the spring SGA primaries.

"I asked them, what was their plan to create a link between both communities?" Aguilar said. "I think there is a disconnection between both communities, unfortunately."

After arriving at K-State, international students might not be quick to become friends with domestic students because coming to new a country can be intimidating, Aguilar said.

"The first reaction you have is to go look for the people who come from the same background," he said.

K-State International Coordinating Council President Lenka Hadamova, graduate student in education from the Czech Republic, agreed and said all people have the same instincts to stay within their comfort zones.

"You tend to socialize with people of your social group or your ethnic group or your state group," Hadamova said. "It's the easiest thing to do."

Dealing with "the other" — meaning anything unusual or out of the ordinary — also can make American students uncomfortable to try and understand people from different backgrounds, said Bradley Shaw, associate professor of modern languages and director of international and area studies in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"I think that we are sometimes a little hesitant or a little reticent when we're dealing with things that we don't understand or don't know," Shaw said.

On campus, Aguilar said he thought hesitation on both sides — domestic and international — has led to many international students not having a real connection with the rest of the study body.

"I think the whole disconnection is just a lack of communication, honestly," he said.

An example of this can be seen at internationally themed events on campus, which often lack participation from American students, he said.

International Week, held annually during spring semester, is a weeklong series of events sponsored by the International Coordinating Council, which are intended to allow international students to share their cultures with the campus and community, Hadamova said.

In the past, International Week has gone unnoticed by many American students, perhaps because they were simply unaware of what was being offered by international groups, Aguilar said.

"Many people don't go to that type of event because they have no idea what's going on," Aguilar said.

Americans can become more involved in diverse events just by meeting a single international student.

"I don't think it's an issue that they don't care," she said. "I think once you've found your international person, it's much easier to be invited or to find out about events."

Because of budget restrictions, promoting international events to the Manhattan community has been difficult, but the International Coordinating Council has

Events encourage smoking ban in city

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association executives will lead a forum to encourage a smoking ban in all workplaces and public buildings in Manhattan from noon to 1 p.m. today.

Matt Wagner, SGA student body president, said he encourages the city to become a smoke-free environment, because students are a part of the community.

"This should be something of interest for the students in establishments who deal with [smoking]," Wagner said.

Wagner said he encourages everyone to take a look at the smoke-free petition because it is an issue that affects almost everyone.

The SGA executive branch members said they are pushing for this ban because they want to look after the well-being of students and the community.

"This is important to us because of the health risk to students when they are out in the community, and also six of the 12 Big 12 schools are in some way smoke-free," Wagner said.

Wagner said the SGA has researched and has facts and knowledge about the issue and feels more confident to push the subject across to students and the community more effectively.

"[We] wanted to make sure we had facts and figures together before we pushed it," Wagner said. "We didn't want to push this if we didn't have the facts."

The panel also will include experts and Manhattan business owners.

"We sought out to find people who were knowledgeable of the situation and smoking issues to speak in the panel," Wagner said. "We picked the most qualified individuals."

The panel, Wagner said, will address the issues of a

K-State-Salina campus to open new student life center

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most students at K-State could not picture campus without the student union. It is the go-to place for lunch, a hang out for in-between classes and another place for recreation. However, just an hour down the road on the K-State Salina campus, this convenience is not available for students.

After more than 20 years of planning, Salina finally received a state approval to start construction of the new $5.9 million Student Life Center — providing a much needed hub for student life on campus.

The center, scheduled to open in July 2009, will provide a place for students and members of the Salina community to meet, develop leadership skills, maintain physical health and promote academic achievement, said K-State Salina dean Dennis Kuhlman.

The need for a student center was initiated in the mid-1980s before K-State Salina existed. The master plan continued to develop and change through the Kansas Technical Institute merger with K-State in 1991. When Kuhlman was appointed dean of K-State Salina in 1997, he responded to student's concerns and began to actively pursue the creation of a student life center.

Kuhlman said the academic buildings and residence halls are located on the north side of campus, while the recreation center is a mile south of campus. He noted this distance was a complaint of many students.

"What we're missing is a gathering place for just social life, to visit and just hang out," Kuhlman said.

On the K-State Salina campus, most students hang out at the library, Kuhlman said.

"I don't think on K-State's campus in Manhattan Hale library is the student hub," he said, jokingly.

The new center, which is being funded by student fees and corporate funds from alumni and private donors, will include a basketball gymnasium, racquetball/handball courts, a cardiovascular area, free weights, aerobic/fitness areas, a second-level running track, administrative offices and ample relaxation areas.

Kuhlman said the recreation center on the Salina campus will be sold, and the new student life center will house exercise equipment.

The new center will serve as a focal point on campus, just as Anderson Hall does in Manhattan, he said. The center will help increase student enrollment and ultimately help the city of Salina's economic development.

According to K-State Media Relations, the student body at Salina consists of approximately 1,000 students. There are also 125 faculty and staff.

The community in Salina have been quite helpful and supportive in the process, Kuhlman said. An architecture firm in town even donated their time to help develop the center.

Doug Zerr, K-State Salina's student body president, said the project has been an "uphill battle," but he said he is happy that the fruits of their labors are finally starting to materialize. He credits Kuhlman for taking student concerns to heart and Mark Priesen, K-State Salina's foundation local agency director, for dealing with the monetary aspect.

Zerr said he got involved with SGA because he knew he could make a change on campus — one big change being

UGB, Varney's scholarship deadline today at 5 p.m.

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Student Union Governing Board and Varney's Bookstore are offering a $1,000 scholarship to alleviate some of the financial hardships part-time students at K-State encounter.

The deadline is today at 5 p.m. Applications can be picked up in the Union Director's Office on the second floor of the K-State Student Union and should be dropped off at the same location.

Students who are enrolled in less than 12 credit hours are eligible to apply.

The scholarship will be awarded in two $500 increments, one for each semester. A committee from the UGB will decide on the winner after spring break.

The scholarship is endowed by a percentage of the total monthly sales from the Union Bookstore and its operating contractor, University Bookstore Inc., said Bernard Pitts, assistant vice president of the Union.

The UGB created this scholarship in 2004 to help part-time students who face many challenges that are not shared by their full-time counterparts.

"Varney's has been very cooperative and understands they are partners in higher education," Pitts said.

Pitts said the intent of the scholarship is to encourage part-time students who have to work full-time jobs — or have family obligations that prohibit them from being a full-time student — to participate in student life programs the Union offers.

"We want part-time students to experience the full-collegiate experience," Pitts said. "We are hoping that this scholarship would relieve some of the pressure and allow them to participate."

K-State Student Union Bookstore Manager, Steve Levin, said the partnership with the Union has been great.

"We realize that part-time students often struggle with jobs, families and kids," Levin said. "This scholarship is a way to help them not worry about finances and concentrate on studies."

Senate to consider net neutrality resolution

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Proposed legislation that discourage state and national legislatures from allowing Internet service providers to charge content providers based on the types and sizes of content will be addressed tonight in the weekly Student Senate meeting.

The inability to pay tolls would result in bad service or no service at all, according to the resolution to support Internet neutrality. It will be reviewed tonight and is scheduled to be voted on the week after spring break.

Most of the final action items, except allocations, are intended to clarify existing legislation and the university's constitution.

One bill in final action will, if passed, increase the Office of Student Activities and Services privilege fee by $140,000.

The additional money will help continue the Collegiate Readership Program. The program has provided five daily newspapers to students and faculty since 2003.

An increase of $5,000 in the fine arts student group funding from reserves also will be voted on.

Other items of new legislation include a resolution to support all branches of the U.S. military and give recognition of the hard work and service soldiers have provided.

Senators also will review legislation to approve the 2008 Student Governing Association election results.

THE FOURUM 785-395-4444

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Michael Beasley: Could you at least come take your picture by your signature on the wall at Dillons? Thanks.

Hey, girl: In the words of the great Falco, show me your moves.

Hopefully with all of the DULs given out, there will be more parking on campus.

To the guy on the bike that just about ran over four people: Yielding a crosswalk applies to you too.

Were those underwear or shorts that you were wearing with those Uggs boots?

To the girls who didn't tip their Jimmy John's driver on Fake Patty's Day: I know where you live.

I just wanted to say to the guy in the black shirt and the khaki shorts who almost got hit by a white Malibu in front of the dorms when he was crossing Manhattan Avenue today at about 11: I'm really sorry. I just didn't see you there. My bad.

Roommate: Refill the toilet paper every now and then.

To the guy driving around with Michael Beasley on your window: You are creepy.

The Derb food gives me nightmares.

So, I was standing in line to get an enchilada, and my friend's boyfriend says, "It's so small." And I said, "That's what she said."

Goodnow has fleas.

K-State should definitely have a bachelor auction. I'll buy Willie for $1 million.

I'm heaven, and you're little baby Jesus.

To the brunette waiting on her 4:30 class in Ahearn who was staring at me: We should date.

I'm pretty sure I just saw some Classy Cats at the rec, because they looked like they had no idea what they were doing.

I wish I was photosynthetic.

Hey, guy practicing on the bagpipes: Good job.

Bagpipe Man rocks my socks off.

The Haymaker bagpipe player strikes again.

Consider the daffodil, and while you're doing that, I'll be over here looking through your stuff.

This bagpipes guy is pretty much ruining my academic career. Now instead of trying to learn about my classes, all I can dream about is bagpipes.

I just had an insect crash-land on my eye, and it was extremely unpleasant.

Hey, bagpipe guy: Retune.

Bagpipe Man: You make my day.

Thanks for serenading Haymaker, bagpipe guy.

To the girly guys in the Mustang that yelled at us while we were walking: Get a truck.

I saw Michael Beasley reading today — a picture book.

To the guy who just dropped the soap in the shower: What's up?

I didn't know soldiers of Christ could make it into the Blotter.

To the people who walk and text message at the same time: I hope you walk into a wall.

Has anybody seen the new Aggieville billboard out on Highway 177? That thing is awesome.

Did you know that the border patrol has an advertisement in the Collegian? That is amazing.

Some girl's sparkly shoes just blinded me today.

I need 500 pounds of flour, dang it.

Any man that wouldn't cheat for a poke doesn't want one bad enough.

Hey, Moore Hall: You're still getting dominated in the Fourum. Eat it.

Hey, you: My doctor says jealousy is an evil disease, so get well soon.

I want to make babies with your brother.

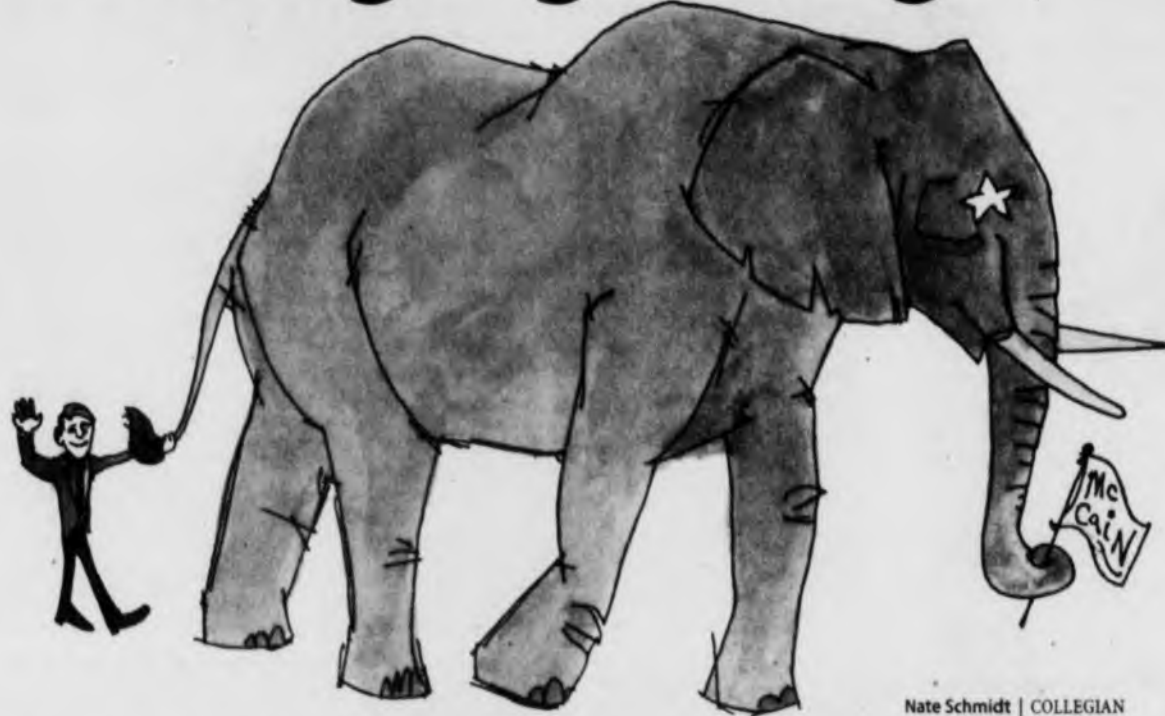

If you're a redhead and wear braces and you're in English 340 class: You're hot, and by God, I'd love to get to know you.

Help. My boss is a psycho.

Joe: Seriously, stop starting drama in ARH.

Ron Paul's dedication to improving U.S. respectable despite impending loss

Down, but not out, Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, announced Monday on CNN's "American Morning" he will continue in his pursuit of the Republican nomination despite knowing absolutely no chance of winning.

"If you're in a campaign for only gaining power, that's one thing," Paul said. "If you're in a campaign to influence ideas and the future of the country, the campaign is never over."

Two days after Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., became the Republican Party's presumptive nominee, Paul spoke in a video posted on YouTube.com about his reasons for staying in the race.

"Though victory in the conventional political sense is not available in the presidential race, many victories have been achieved due to your hard work and enthusiasm," he said. "We must remember elections are short-term efforts. Revolutions are long-term projects."

Paul, though far too right wing for my personal tastes, is a refreshing change from the more politically fickle candidates who have dominated the presidential primaries thus far. Both his words and his actions speak of a genuine desire to see change in his party and in the nation as a whole.

Though many might find Paul's campaign to be almost comical — he is, after all, a former Libertarian running as a Republican in a race he has already lost — there is something extremely respectable in his uncompromising stance on the issues.

Paul's refusal to drop out of the race will force McCain to continue to participate in productive political discourse — something that might otherwise have disappeared from the final few Republican primaries.

It is important for candidates to continue engaging in debate on the issues to ensure that voters are as informed as they can possibly be when they finally choose the next president of the United States. It is important that candidates like Paul continue to push the envelope and continue to confront their opponents on the issues that matter.

For his part — Paul said he will not be endorsing McCain for the presidency.

"I'm not likely to support John McCain unless he changes his views," Paul said. "He doesn't represent anything I've talked about for 30 years. How could I reject everything I've talked about for 30 years ... and say, 'Oh, OK. Now it's all over. Unity is the most important thing. Now I endorse John McCain'? Nobody would understand that. I certainly would have a difficult time adapting to that."

I find Paul's refusal to bend to the will of the party admirable. We need more candidates like him to ensure the democratic process continues to be changed, debated and improved.

His dedication to the debate and discussion of ideas, even in the face of certain defeat, should be respected.

Wife supports campaign, family postponing career

When Barack Obama decided to run for president, his wife was earning more money than he was.

According to an article in USA Today on May 10, 2007, Michelle Obama earned $273,618 from her job at the University of Chicago Hospitals in 2006, while Barack made a modest $157,082 as a U.S. Senator from Illinois.

Still, Michelle decided to let her flourishing career take a temporary backseat to raising her children and assisting in her husband's campaign efforts.

Near the beginning of her husband's presidency in the 1990s, Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., did not express the same priorities when it came to sacrificing career for her spouse's political advancement.

In an interview on Nightline on March 26, 1992, Clinton said, "I suppose I could have stayed home and baked cookies and had teas, but what I decided to do was to fulfill my profession, which I entered before my husband was in public life."

Well, Hillary, Michelle's résumé is evidence that she already has fulfilled her profession. She was an assistant to former Chicago mayor Richard Daley, the founding executive director of a leadership training program and associate dean of student services at the University of Chicago — not to mention, her most recent job at the University of Chicago Hospitals as vice president of community and external affairs.

Michelle has traveled to and spoken at several conferences across the country on her husband's behalf.

It is fair to say she is an effective public speaker — she got her bachelor's degree in sociology from Princeton University, and she has a law degree from Harvard University. Despite the general consensus that lawyers aren't known for their honesty, Michelle has been straightforward and candid about Barack's qualities.

In the USA Today article, Michelle said she wants voters to realize that Barack is not the "next messiah who's going to fix it all."

That comment has caused speculation from both sides, convincing some that Michelle thinks U.S. voters see her husband as a god.

On the contrary, perhaps she was just reminding people that all the problems in the United States are not going to disappear. Not only is Barack not the next messiah, but neither is any other candidate.

"He is going to stumble — make mistakes and say things you don't agree with," she said.

Though Michelle has been actively involved in her husband's campaign, she has avoided taking over and serving her own political agendas. Apparently, that is more than one could say for Bill Clinton.

According to an article on Feb. 2 in the McClatchy Washington Bureau, Barack said Bill was "hogging so much of the spotlight that Barack wondered aloud whom he was running against." This is not Bill's campaign, therefore it should not be used to build up his character; his wife needs his support, not necessarily the constant reminder of what he did while in office. His support would be more effective if he would step out of the spotlight.

It turns out Michelle can stay plenty busy with the full-time job of positively supporting her husband's campaign and caring for her family.

She probably doesn't even have time to bake cookies.

On June 7, "Biking Across Kansas" cyclists will start peddling across the state for an eight day tour. The bikers will start at the Colorado border and head toward Missouri typically traveling 65-80 miles per day.

Cyclists pedal across Kansas

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About one thousand cyclists cross Kansas together on their bikes every year.

"Biking Across Kansas" is an annual event where cyclists start at the Colorado border and pedal their way toward Missouri over an eight-day span. This year the tour will start on June 7 in St. Francis, Kan., and end in Atchison, Kan. The registration deadline is May 7.

Bradley McKellip, Kansas resident, said he had a great time last year during the event.

"It's a surreal experience spending all day transporting yourself from one hot, quaint small Kansas town to another for a week in the company of friends," he said. "Unfortunately, I'll be unable to participate this year due to conflicts with my summer job, but I highly recommend the experience."

Roger Lomshek, president of the Kansas Cycling Association, has participated in BAK a few times.

"Many of the towns visited only have 1,000 residents or less, so the BAK participants arriving is a big deal, and many restaurants end up running out of food," he said. "The BAK riders have been compared to a plague of locusts descending on a town. The appetite you have from riding nearly 500 miles in one week is pretty severe."

A road map of the bikers' course, which will start at on June 7.

The event typically has 800-900 riders every year. Riders cover 65-85 miles per day. BAK arranges lodging, usually in high school gymnasiums where everyone sleeps on the floor or camps outside on the lawn.

"Riders tend to wake between 5 and 6 a.m., eat a large breakfast and hit the road for six to 10 hours of bicycling," Lomshek said.

The route changes every year so the riders can visit new towns each time they participate.

Riders get more than a workout — BAK is also an active sightseeing experience. They often visit with locals, see towns, stop by shops or museums, take local tours and go to historical places of interest along the roadside.

BAK is not a competition, so participants do not need to be professional racers, and all capable riders can register.

Good riding conditions are crucial for a successful trip, according to the official BAK Web site, www.bak.org. The site suggests doing training rides for as many miles as you can — the more the better.

Colin Rosenow, Manhattan High School student, said he is looking forward to this recreational experience.

"I'm an enthusiast and an amateur cyclist, but I ride a bike often," he said. "I will travel with my friends, and it should be great. I want to see more Kansas."

BAK has participants who are Rosenow's age all the way up to their 70s.

The youngest participant was eight, and another cyclist older than 70 participated in previous rides across Kansas.

Criminologist, author to speak today on gender, urban issues

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An associate professor of criminology and criminal justice and author will discuss her latest book that addresses African-American girls and urban inequality today in the K-State Student Union Little Theatre.

Jody Miller will lecture about her recently released book "Getting Played: African American Girls, Urban Inequality, and Gendered Violence." Miller is an associate professor at the University of Missouri-St. Louis who specializes in feminist theories and qualitative research methods. K-State's Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work will sponsor Miller's lecture.

Dana Britton, K-State professor of sociology, said Miller is one of the most prominent feminist criminologists in the United States. Miller's research examines the intersections among race, socioeconomic class and gender, Britton said.

"Her work looks at a topic that doesn't get looked at much," Britton said. "She looks at violence against women in a social context like the neighborhoods they live in and the lack of resources in those neighborhoods. She's paying attention much more to the nature of the neighborhoods rather than the pathology of the perpetrators."

Miller wrote "One of the Guys: Girls, Gangs, and Gender" in 2001. She also is a member of the National Consortium on Violence Research and has authored several book chapters and journal articles about criminology.

Regardless of students' academic majors, Britton said Miller's lecture will provide insight about a timely social problem.

"We're incarcerating more people than any other population on the planet, and it doesn't seem to be helping," Britton said. "Miller's research allows us to look at the social contexts rather than the punitive."

Travis Linneman, graduate student in sociology, said Miller's research examines violence as a gendered action and uses inner cities as a social context. Linneman said readers of Miller's work can learn about the consequences of urban inequality, gendered inequality and how young women negotiate their environments at such levels.

"['Getting Played'] in particular shows how neighborhood disadvantage can contribute to disadvantaged populations," Linneman said. "She looks at inner-city, poverty-stricken neighborhoods and outcomes for girls in those neighborhoods. The notion that comes out of that is gendered violence; you can also apply those to how they apply to society in a broader context."

Campbell named to award watch list

Senior linebacker Ian Campbell is already garnering attention for his final year of college eligibility, even before the Spring Game.

Campbell was one of 54 players – including six from the Big 12 Conference – to be named to the Rotary Lombardi Award watch list. The award is given out to line-men and other defensive players who line up within five yards of the line of scrimmage. All of the players were either named All-Americans or to the first team in their conference.

Campbell is a two-time All-Big 12 selection and has recorded 16 sacks and 28.5 tackles for loss in the last two seasons. He tied the single-season record for sacks in a season, recording 11.5 in 2006.

Crystal dons Yankee pinstripes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — Billy Crystal came prepared. Black maple bat in hand, the New York Yankees newcomer brought a well-worn glove with his name neatly stitched on the side, too.

The comedian felt confident about hitting and fielding part. It was the drug test that had him worried.

"I'm supposed to bring blood and urine to the umpire tomorrow," he kidded Wednesday. "I might test positive for Maalox."

Quite a 60th birthday present for the actor, director, Oscar host and lifelong Yankees fan: A chance to play in an exhibition game Thursday at Legends Field.

He kept the jokes to a minimum, made contact on all 52 swings against batting practice pitcher Tino Martinez and kept up with Derek Jeter in jogging drills.

"He did fine," Jeter said. "He did a good job."

Crystal will become the latest celebrity to play in a spring training game, joining the likes of Garth Brooks, Tom Selleck and Bruce Hornsby.

Exactly what Crystal will do against Pittsburgh remains a mystery. He'll get to swing, but it's unclear if the former high school infielder will need his black Rawlings mitt.

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The ball just didn't seem to fall K-State's way Wednesday in the second round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament at Municipal Auditorium.

A final shot from junior guard Shalee Lehning to win the game for the Wildcats in overtime rolled in and out of the basket, and No. 8-seeded Iowa State became the victors of a 66-65 game.

"When I released it, it felt really good," Lehning said. "It was straight on. I thought it was in. Tough luck — that's how they roll sometimes."

The biggest loss of all for K-State, however, was senior guard Kimberly Dietz, who fell to the floor with what appeared to be a knee injury with 13:12 left in the first half. K-State coach Deb Patterson said the senior's status will be determined after further tests. Patterson said the players continued the rest of the game with emotions for their injured teammate.

"Immediately, you're surrounded with emotions for her," Patterson said.

Iowa State coach Bill Fennelly has seen knee injuries to his own team twice this season; junior guard Nicky Wieben and senior forward Toccara Ross both suffered injuries to their anterior cruciate ligaments during the season.

"My heart goes out to Kimberly Dietz and her family," Fennelly said. "I watched that happen on our team, and when she fell — it takes a lot of what was one of the best college basketball games I've ever been a part of."

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Junior guard Shalee Lehning puts up a shot against Iowa State's Alison Lacey. Lehning had 15 points and 11 rebounds, which was her fourth-consecutive double-double, tying a K-State record.

K-State (21-9, 13-3 Big 12) held the lead at halftime but quickly fell behind in the second half as the Cyclones (20-11, 7-9 Big 12) jumped out to a 30-25 lead on a 6-0 run. The Wildcats charged back with a 14-2 run that spanned over eight minutes to take a 43-35 lead.

Iowa State made three-pointers on its next three possessions to tie the game at 44 apiece with 4:27 left in the game. Lehning put the Wildcats ahead 53-51 with a lay-up with 40 seconds left.

Iowa State junior guard Heather Ezell missed a three-point shot with less than 15 seconds to play. Sophomore guard Alison Lacey missed a shot with less than five seconds to play, but junior forward Jocelyn Anderson put a ball back in with less than one second left to force overtime.

K-State scored the first six points of overtime to take a 59-53 lead. The Wildcats held the lead throughout overtime until Lacey made a lay-up with four seconds left and followed with a free throw to give the Cyclones a 66-65 lead. Fennelly said he expected Lehning would be the player to take the final shot for K-State.

"Everyone in the building knew who was going to shoot it, and you got to give that kid credit because she wanted to shoot it," Fennelly said. "A lot of

TRACK AND FIELD

K-State qualifies 6 for indoor national championships

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team qualified six athletes to Friday and Saturday's NCAA Indoor Championships, in Fayetteville, Ark. All six placed in the top three at the Big 12 Conference Championships and enter the meet seeded in the top 12 of their respective events.

Junior Scott Sellers enters the meet as one of the favorites in the high jump. His jump of 7-6 is the highest collegiate jump in the nation this season. He is the reigning outdoor national champion and the Big 12 indoor champion. He defeated Nebraska's Dusty Jonas, the second-ranked high jumper in the nation, in head-to-head competition at the conference meet on March 1.

"In Scott's case, he is going in with the highest jump, and certainly many would argue that he is the best guy," said coach Cliff Rovelto. "And he probably is the best guy, but not always the best guy wins. He's going to have to jump at a high level to win."

Junior weight thrower Loren Groves is another Wildcat poised to contend for a title at the national championships. Groves broke the K-State record and won the Big 12 title Feb. 29 with a throw of 70-3, which ranks her fourth in the nation. She will chase Southern Illinois' world-record holder, Brittany Riley, who enters the meet with a throw of 79-2 1/2.

Groves will be joined at the meet by fellow weight-thrower, senior Laci Heller, who is making her third appearance at the NCAA Indoor Championships. She is ranked 10th entering the meet with a throw of 66-10 and said she wants to set a personal record and finish in the top eight. Both throwers said they will be at an advantage with a teammate to lean on.

"It will be completely different having a teammate there," Heller said. "I went to a meet last weekend, and it was weird not having [Groves] there. It will definitely be beneficial to have a teammate there."

It will make it feel more like a normal meet and help calm the nerves."

The Wildcats also have a pair of teammates competing in the heptathlon. Freshmen Moritz Cleve and Rok Derzanic are ranked eighth and 10th, respectively, entering the meet. Qualifying both freshmen for the meet is impressive, Rovelto said, because only about 8 percent of the athletes who qualify are freshman.

Competing side-by-side will be helpful at the championships, Cleve said, as it was at the conference meet, where the duo finished second and third.

"At the Big 12 meet that worked perfectly," Cleve said. "We are really good buddies, and it is just a lot of fun competing together. We are always pushing each other in practice, and we do the same in competitions."

Senior Donnie Parrish qualified for the meet in the 400-meter dash, when she posted a school-record time of 53.15 to take second at the conference meet. She enters the meet with the 12th best time in the nation.

Parrish came to K-State as a sophomore with the intention of being a sprinter, but Rovelto said he knew she could be more successful in a longer event.

"I felt like the 400 was her best event," Rovelto said. "I don't know if she has totally, completely embraced that yet, but she at least knows she can run at a high level obviously in that event. I think she is gaining confidence in that event all the time."

It is difficult to predict how high the team can finish, Rovelto said, but with six athletes competing, it is feasible to finish in the top 20.

"I put more stock in going to the national meet with people that we feel like have a legitimate chance to score," he said. "And I think all six of these kids have a chance to score."

Columnist: Deserving Wildcats get little respect during March Madness

Sports fans all over the world are in the midst of the best time in college basketball — the post-season tournaments.

But for some of the Wildcat basketball players who were on last year's team, they might soon have a sense of déjà vu if K-State doesn't take care of business in the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

It was this time a year ago K-State had a team that finished fourth in the Big 12, posted a 10-6 league record and had more than 20 wins overall. Even with such impressive credentials, the Wildcats were still considered to be on the bubble of making the NCAA Tournament. It was rumored they needed a win against the Texas Tech Red Raiders to lock up a bid in the Big Dance.

K-State must have been listening because they crushed Texas Tech, 66-45.

The Wildcats were thought to be a lock then, especially after playing a relatively close game in the next match-up against KU in the semifinals. All K-State could do was wait to find out its fate. Selection Sunday came, and the Wildcats weren't chosen in the field of 65. They were the first school in a major conference to be in the double-digits in conference wins, finish in the top four of their respective league and not make the tournament.

The most absurd fact is that Texas Tech made the tournament, and the team that crushed them in the tournament — K-State — didn't.

Even CBS analyst Billy Packard questioned why in the world a team like Texas Tech would make into the tournament when the Wildcats didn't. The head of the committee gave a wonderful explanation on why this happened. He said the Red Raiders got in because they played a game before they faced the Wildcats, so they might have been tired when they hooked up with K-State. Good thing he forgot to mention the opponent for their opening round game was the lowly Colorado Buffaloes, who were in last place.

Now in 2008, the Wildcats face a similar challenge.

Even with their road win at Iowa State in the season finale, K-State still isn't certain it locked up a bid in the NCAA, though it placed third in the conference. ESPN never really has liked the Wildcats, so when they predict K-State is still on the bubble, it doesn't surprise me. It's mind-boggling that they have Oklahoma a lock but not the Wildcats.

Once again, K-State is getting disrespected.

Maybe the whole team should take a page out of Michael Beasley's book and play angry during the tournament. We all know how Beasley plays when he is mad, but imagine how good the team could play if they all had the same mentality.

It's time to prove to the selection committee that the Cats belong in the Big Dance, and they can't skip over them this year.

Women's golf finishes in 16th at UNLV meet

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team finished the University of Nevada at Las Vegas Spring Invitational in 16th place Wednesday in Boulder City, Nev., at Boulder Creek Golf Course.

As a team, the Wildcats shot a 50-over par 914, putting them 56 strokes behind the tournament co-champions Washington State University and Golfweek.com's No. 35 team, the Brigham Young Cougars.

Senior Michelle Regan, who finished with a four-over par 220, led the way for the Wildcats, and her score placed her in a five-way tie for 25th.

K-State got off to a rough start to the three-round, 54-hole tournament, shooting an opening-round 23-over par, but coach Kristi Knight said she was proud of the way her team responded.

"We obviously got off to a tough start day one, but they did the best they could,"

Knight said. "A lot of good things happened for us on our first nine holes on Wednesday, and we're going to build on that, but we just couldn't be as successful as we would have liked on the back nine."

This marked only the third time this season in seven tournaments that the Wildcats haven't finished in the top three.

The Wildcats now have a quick turnaround in their schedule, as they travel Monday to Austin, Texas, for the three-round, 54-hole Betsy Rawls Invitational at the University of Texas Golf Club.

"We are going to take a day off, get some rest and have a good, focused practice Friday," Knight said. "I think we are working our way to where we need to be."

Knight said the team is working toward improving.

"They played hard, but we just dug a hole in round one," Knight said. "They battled back, and we're going keep working hard and keep moving forward."

kids shy away from that kind of responsibility."

Lehning charged the length of the floor and pulled up just inside the free-throw line and released a buzzer-beating shot that rolled around the rim three times before falling off to the right side of the basket.

It was the first time in the history of the tournament a No. 1 seed was defeated in the quarterfinals and a No. 8 advanced to the semi-final round.

Iowa State was led in scoring by Ezell, who finished with 26 points, including 8-of-13 from three-point range — a tournament record. The Cyclones finished 12-of-28 from three-point range with Lacey knocking down the other four shots. Lacey finished with 17 points.

K-State was led by Lehning who scored 15 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, recording her fourth-straight double-double and tying the school record for consecutive double-doubles. Junior forward Marlies Gipson scored 16 points, and junior forward Danielle Zanotti added 12 off the bench.

The Wildcats will learn their seeding in the NCAA tournament on Monday night during the selection process for the women's tournament.

UMKC STUDENT STILL MISSING AFTER TRIP
UNIVERSITY NEWS (U. MISSOURI-KANSAS CITY)

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jesse "Opie" Ross disappeared in November 2006, while in Chicago with other University of Missouri at Kansas City students for a model United Nations conference, but his family and friends continue to hope for his safe return.

At a benefit concert held on Saturday in Pierson Auditorium, which reminded everyone the search continues and raised money for a scholarship in his name, Jesse's parents spoke of the ongoing efforts.

"We've got a private investigator out of Belton, our hometown," said Jesse's father, Don Ross. "He's really helpful in coordinating with the Chicago police. They have put Jesse's DNA and dental records into the FBI database."

The parents, who continue to offer a $10,000 reward for any information, said no real leads have come up so far.

"When he disappeared, the initial reaction was perhaps he had wandered off, so time passed," Don Ross said.

Jesse's father said he wasn't blaming anyone, but by the time a real investigation started, the roughly 1,000 participants at the conference had headed home, Jesse's hotel room was cleaned, and there wasn't much to go on.

"Over 800,000 people are missing at any one time," he said. "... It's normal the police thought a 19-year-old might be just doing what kids his age sometimes do."

The benefit concert featured three different bands: Episode 4, Frat Pack and A Dead Giveaway, a band Jesse used to tour with, and helped to organize the shows. A Dead Giveaway worked with Jesse's fraternity, Lambda Chi Alpha, to set up this second musical event at UMKC. Don Ross also thanked the university administration for its help and support.

"I know things look pretty gloomy, but I've played a little conversation in my mind," said Jesse's mother, Donna Ross. "Jesse would never forgive us. 'What do you mean?' he would say. 'How could you give up?' ... We just hope and pray. Somebody's got to know something."

CONGRESS CONSIDERING BILL TO SIMPLIFY FAFSA
DAILY ILLINI (U. ILLINOIS)

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Last weekend, Shivani Mishra went home to spend time with her family and her FAFSA form.

The Free Application for Federal Student Aid, or FAFSA, asks students to submit their financial and academic qualifications for college financial aid.

"I had to wait until I went home so I could have all my tax information and my family's tax information together," said Mishra, freshman in business at the University of Illinois.

Congress is considering ways to streamline the application process, which currently can take anywhere from half an hour to ten hours to complete.

One possible solution would have the Department of Education and Internal Revenue Service share student financial data already submitted on previous forms.

"Because of its complexity, FAFSA is more of an obstacle than a gateway for the people who need it most," said Laura Asher, associate director of the Institute for College Access and Success. "If you are moving a lot or changing jobs, it can be tough to pull the information together."

Asher said she believes the measures would improve student data security by eliminating unnecessary copies of sensitive information.

The Department of Education and Internal Revenue

Service have held preliminary talks, but the design process could take between one and two years, she said.

Dan Mann, university director of financial aid, said he is interested in improving the FAFSA form, but said its oversimplification can lead to inaccuracy.

"I think that the current form and process is good," he said. "I get concerned when they talk about further simplification that we might lose our ability to make good financial aid decisions."

He said the FAFSA process has improved over the last decade, with more information available through high schools and Web sites.

"I think we're doing a much better job making information available," Mann said.

Several companies offer FAFSA completion services, although Mann said the University does not endorse any of them.

However, Don Singleton, vice president of Student Financial Aid Services Inc., said the aid process can be daunting for families with little experience.

"It affects not just the students, but the whole family," Singleton said.

The company charges clients between $49.99 and $79.99 to complete their FAFSA forms.

Singleton said the company has contacted the offices of several legislators regarding the proposed changes to FAFSA.

"Any time you're in a support service helping people navigate a government form, there is always talk about changing things that will affect your business," Singleton said.

Mann said students should not discount the resources already available to help them complete the FAFSA forms.

"If you look at this over time, one could argue that a great deal of simplification has already been done," he said.

World briefs

HAMAS SETS TERMS FOR CEASE-FIRE WITH ISRAEL

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — The Hamas prime minister called publicly Wednesday for a period of calm with Israel, laying out conditions that would end attacks on Palestinian militants, open Gaza's borders and lift economic sanctions.

But shortly after the appeal by Ismail Haniyeh, Israeli troops opened fire on a car in the West Bank town of Bethlehem and killed four Palestinian militants, clouding the prospects for a cease-fire.

Among the conditions for an end to fighting that Haniyeh set earlier was a halt to Israeli military operations in the West Bank.

"We are talking about a mutual comprehensive calm, which means that the enemy must fulfill its obligations," Haniyeh said in a speech at Gaza City's Islamic University. "The Israelis must stop the aggression ... including assassinations and invasions, end the sanctions and open the borders."

Haniyeh's offer by came amid signs that Israel and Hamas are moving closer to an Egyptian-brokered deal to end weeks of fighting that have killed more than 120 Palestinians and five Israelis.

Israel stepped up attacks on Gaza two weeks ago in response to repeated rocket barrages on southern Israeli towns by Hamas militants. The fighting has subsided in recent days. But both sides have denied talk of a formal truce and there are no direct contacts.

FLU OUTBREAK CLOSES HONG KONG SCHOOLS

HONG KONG — Hong Kong's government ordered Wednesday that all kindergartens and primary schools be closed for two weeks amid a flu outbreak, shutting down classes for more than a half million students.

The government also asked one of its top scientists to study three child deaths over the past week.

The Education Bureau said all kindergartens, primary schools and special schools would begin the Easter holiday early to prevent the spread of influenza in schools.

The order affected 1,745 schools, which had 559,019 students enrolled in the 2006-07 school year.

Health secretary York Chow said the administration has seen a growing number of people suffering from the flu, adding that bringing the Easter break forward will help reduce cross infection among school children and calm public fears.

"We estimate this peak season of influenza will continue for a few weeks," Chow said during a news conference late Wednesday night.

Earlier in the day, Chow said Yuen Kwok-yung, who helped study Hong Kong's outbreak of severe acute respiratory syndrome outbreak or SARS about four years ago, will head a panel of scientists studying the recent deaths.

SARS infected 1,755 people in Hong Kong and killed 299.

AYATOLLAH SAYS U.S. BEHIND IRAN CRITICISM

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei on Wednesday said the United States and its allies were behind criticism that upcoming parliament elections will be unfair.

The Ayatollah, who is Iran's top authority on all state and religious matters, said Iranians on Friday should elect those who are firm in their opposition of the United States and in their loyalty to Iran's Islamic system.

"As much as they can, they are making statements against the (Iranian) government, parliament and officials, to make the public unenthusiastic and doubtful whether the elections are free or not," he said of the U.S. and its allies.

"With complete confidence I can tell you, my dear people, that the elections are taking place correctly," he told the audience at his Tehran residence. "Attending and participating in these elections is a national duty and a religious duty."

The remarks by Khamenei to a crowd of supporters were an indirect call to voters to reject the few reformists remaining in the race.

Some 1,700 candidates, many of them reformists seeking better relations with the West and greater freedoms at home, were prevented from running on the grounds of insufficient loyalty to Islam and Iran's Islamic revolution.

Hard-liners, including allies of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, are widely expected to maintain the hold they have had on parliament since 2004.

WITNESSED: CHARLES TAYLOR REWARDED SOLDIERS FOR KILLING CHILDREN

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — Charles Taylor rewarded militia fighters who killed babies during West Africa's civil wars and called one woman's unborn child an "enemy" who must die, a former militia commander testified Wednesday.

During a grim day at Taylor's war crimes trial in The Hague, Joseph "Zigzag" Marzah said he committed hundreds of murders on the former Liberian president's orders. He claimed Taylor celebrated his rise to power with a human sacrifice, burying a pregnant woman alive in sand.

"We executed everybody — babies, women, old men. There were so many executions. I can't remember them all," Marzah told the court.

Taylor, 59, is accused of orchestrating violence in neighboring Sierra Leone's civil war from his presidential palace in Liberia. He is accused of trading so-called "blood diamonds" to finance the war, which ended in 2002.

Prosecutors described Marzah as one of their key witnesses, testifying with inside knowledge of Taylor's operations in Liberia and Sierra Leone, where he is accused of responsibility for the murders, rapes and amputations committed by fighters loyal to him.

GROUPS | Professor says both sides should make effort to connect

planned to try to get more non-international students to come to the events for this year's International Week, which will held April 6-12, Hadamova said.

Not all international students consider themselves to be separated from the rest of campus, however.

Dave Choi, sophomore in kinesiology from South Korea, said since arriving last fall, half of his friends have been international and half have been American.

Choi met most of his friends through regular interactions at Derby Dining Center, he said.

In recent years, international-domestic relations at K-State might have seen some improvement, as American students see the workplace becoming increasingly global, Shaw said.

"I think students recognize that the world is increasingly diverse," Shaw said.

Hadamova, who came to Manhattan from Czech Republic in 2003, said K-State international programming, and the city's attitude at large, seem to have improved.

"I guess either Manhattan changed, or I did, or both," she said.

Hadamova said most K-State students would meet a few international people during their time at college, at least through their classes.

However, Aguilar said that casually knowing people from different cultures is not the same as truly having a deep understanding of them.

Learning more thoroughly about people from different backgrounds is not something Americans or international students should be afraid of, Shaw said.

"I think by learning about other cultures, other languages, other religions, that a lot of those fears and concerns go away," he said. "We realize that the common denominator that we all share is our common humanity, and we all basically want the same things."

Shaw, who has spent his career focusing on international subjects, said he learned the value of being open to different cultures while traveling in Peru at age 19.

"What you are used to by cultural default may not be right for other people, and maybe there are better ways to do things," he said. "I came to appreciate my country, my culture much more after being able to be outside of it and look back at it from a different perspective."

While K-State has continued to improve and encourage international studies, more can be done to incorporate international cases into the curriculum and use international students as resources, he said.

"On many fronts we're making progress, but we still have a long way to go," he said.

Both groups — international and domestic — stand to benefit from forming stronger connections, Aguilar said.

International students can practice English and learn about the country they've come to study in, while domestic students can expand their knowledge about the world, he said.

At the same time, both types of students are to blame for the disconnect between their groups. International students must take more initiative to meet American students, he said.

"The effort needs to go both ways. They have the willingness, but they actually have to go out and interact," Aguilar said. "It's like there are two different communities. It would be great if we could just create one K-State community."

administration and W.O.W. campus ministry leader.

Evans serves as Senior Pastor of the more than 7,000 member Oak Cliff Bible Fellowship in Dallas. He is also founder and president of The Urban Alternative, a national organization that seeks to bring about spiritual renewal in urban America through the church.

"The main purpose of the whole event is its unity," Rhone said. "We're trying to promote unity on campus and even in the community, it's up to the community and the campus."

The W.O.W. ministry has been striving to get the word of Jesus Christ out to the students on campus, and the ministry also tries to promote diversity, he said.

The concert is also supported by World Vision, an organization that works with many gospel artists.

World Vision is a Christian humanitarian organization dedicated to working with children, families and their communities worldwide to reach their full potential by tackling the causes of poverty and injustice.

"The Bible talks about us being one body, and we truly are one body, so there's no separation there," Rhone said.

BAN | SGA hopes to gain ban support

smoking ban and hopefully will encourage those who attend to sign the petition for a smoke-free Manhattan.

The petition later will be sent to city commissioners to look at.

"Students need to make their voices heard and ask questions if they have any and ask about any other issues that pertain to the smoking ban at the panel," Wagner said.

City Commissioner Bob Strawn said he strongly supports a state-wide ordinance for a smoking ban and a local ban.

He also said it depends on how the ordinance is constructed.

"I think generally there is a strong feeling of support [for the ban]," Strawn said. "If we put it through a ballot, I think 70 percent would support it."

With a city ordinance, Strawn said, people will show a high amount of support because people do not like the smell of smoke and are more concerned with the smell and odor rather than the health issues.

"Most people will favor the local ban because of the 'ick' factor," Strawn said.

SALINA | Campus finally gets student center

making the center a reality.

Student's on the Salina campus have raised $2 million in student privilege fees towards the center. They also raised $4 million of private money from individual and corporate donations.

In Zerr's first term as student body president in 2004, he said they began reserving money from SGA's fund to do all the necessary research to determine if they could afford the center.

During this term, SGA and administrators began to put the finalized plan to action, he said.

"It's been a really long time coming," he said. "There's a lot of optimism towards the project, but the same cynicism exists."

Since there have been talks of the new center, students have not seen progress, Zerr said, a lot of students are critical of the center.

The campus has already had a groundbreaking ceremony, Kuhlman said proudly.

"I am excited to death about this," he said.

Cheney Construction Inc., Manhattan, is the general contractor for the project. As soon as weather allows, soil preparation is expected to begin at the site, which is southeast of the College Center.

"Once the students start seeing construction and dirt being moved they we will have something positive to talk about," he said.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Fake Patty's just good ol' fun

It's an excuse for me to drink and pass out all before noon without you naysayers judging me.

It's a reason for me to grow out my red beard.

It's a reason for me to be painfully optimistic about a dating life that's nonexistent.

But really it's just a reason to have fun.

Fake Patrick's Day is the end-all-be-all of fake holidays. It's right up there with Mall Day, Love Day and Arbor Day (let's be serious — it's not real).

Basically because Patrick's real day is always landing during spring break, the great community here at K-State got together and thought, "How can we screw these kids out of a ton of money and yet disguise it as something they should enjoy more than anything else and look forward to for months in advance?"

Enter Fake Patrick's Day.

Are we being tricked? Hell, yes.

Do I care? Hell, no. It's one of the best days of the year. Take this year for instance. My idiot friends got up there at 7 a.m. to wait in line for a free shirt. I go there at a quarter 'til 9 a.m. and still got one.

While several parts about the day were fantastic, there was one memory that I feel will last forever. My friend found a phone in the park on the way to the bars. Going through the numbers he deduced it must belong to a girl. Four beers and 30 minutes later he was absolutely convinced this was the love of his life and spoke angrily at anyone who laughed at the idea.

Another half hour goes by with another four beers and the phone rings. I thought the kid was going to pee himself he was so excited.

"Well?" I asked.

"She's at work right now. She'll be by later to pick it up."

He could hardly contain himself.

Now he should have quit drinking here, but naturally the green pitchers kept coming, and as long as we kept refilling, he kept re-drinking. We were having a ball with it.

A little after 11 a.m. he gets another call.

"She's on her way."

For the next 15 minutes he stared out the window in anticipation shaking our shoulders with each lovely lady that passed by.

Finally one enters, "Are you Dustin?"

He answers, "Damn it!"

We all just stare at the floor, wondering if that actually just happened. Some laugh a little. I laughed a lot. Was she the love of his life? Well, not so much, and we'll just leave it at that.

Another one of my friends got a black eye from himself, another lost her keys, ID and money; another has no idea why I still have his car.

Fake Patrick's Day just has a way of bringing all the strange mishaps together over a green pint, some annoying beads and a lot of laughs. Mark it down on next year's calendar — it's always a good time.

The Beatles were one of the main influences of the 1960s, which included the band members' fashion and music.

'60s affect current trends, music

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Surrounded by upcoming Baby Boomer adults, the 1960s had a movement that put a spotlight on a young generation.

Marla Day, senior curator with apparel textiles, said the '60s were a time of political change when youth began to gain a voice in the public.

"There were so many of them," she said, "and everything they did had a big impact in terms of the sheer number of people."

Day said she is part of the Baby Boom generation, and she remembers that everything teenagers did was under a microscope. She said it was the first time marketing and media had so much attention on youth.

Many of the styles and trends seen in the '60s still can be seen today. Here on campus students can be seen wearing cropped jackets, teased hair and skinny jeans. These influences date back to more than 40 years ago.

JOHN F. KENNEDY

INFLUENCES IN FASHION

Day said John F. and Jackie Kennedy were influential in setting trends at the beginning of the 1960s.

"He was a very young president, so that took a lot of the youth," she said. "They just naturally gravitated to him and his image and his wife and her image."

Day said women looked up to Jackie's sense of style. At the time, women adapted her clothes and her hairstyle.

"Some of the early '60s influence came from her — the cropped jackets and the narrow skirts, and now we're going back to that idea," she said.

Day said men looked up to the president's polished and refined look, which she said is still seen today.

"Some people do dress in that style," she said. "You sort of see a little bit of everything. That's what's interesting about what's going on in fashion."

Deb Brosdahl, associate professor of apparel textiles, named other influences like the Beatles, Twiggy and the Rolling Stones. She said the styles set by these people also can be seen today.

"The skinny jeans are basically a throwback to the 1960s, when they were called stove pipe pants," she said. "That started in England with the Beatles. That's what most people associate with them — that kind of silhouette."

Brosdahl said in the '60s, skinny jeans were worn by both men and women, though women typically did not wear pants until the beginning of the '70s.

She said women are now teasing their hair and pulling it back, which also started in the '60s.

As the '60s saw changes throughout the decade with the assassination of JFK and political protests, fashion saw a change by 1964. Day said in textile fabrics there were more black and white prints, which are seen today with pops of color like yellow or lime green.

Day said gaucho pants, patterned items and leggings were popular during the mid-decade, and these items have shown up again today.

"We're seeing lots of colored hose. The leggings they're showing in the stores with clothes are turquoise and hot pink and yellow. Here we go again," Day said, laughing.

At the end of the decade, Day said the influence of the hippies was evident.

"The hippy grunge or the hippy peasant sort of look, which are Bohemian style — those have been going on for the last four or five years, with the embroidered jeans," she said.

TWIGGY

TRENDS IN MUSIC

During the political climate of the '60s, there were two songwriters who were influential in progressive political ideas. Craig Parker, associate professor music, who teaches music history, said Bob Dylan and Joan Baez wrote many songs that dealt with politics in the 1960s, particularly focusing on opposition to the Vietnam War.

The most popular group was of course the Beatles, Parker said. After the group made its fame on the Ed Sullivan Show, there was a wave of Beatle mania that is still heard on the radio and in grocery stores today.

"Probably their most important album was in 1967, 'Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band,' which was the first rock album conceived as a whole where everything was unified," Parker said. "It was also really important because they did so much studio work. It was impossible to form that live. That started a whole new wave that could only be heard on recordings."

Parker said another long-lasting effect of music during the decade was the Rolling Stone Magazine, which devoted itself to rock 'n' roll and politics and is still in production.

The Rolling Stones group also contributed to today's world in its transformation of radio in America, because stations started becoming exclusively rock 'n' roll, he said.

"I remember when I was growing up in the '60s, you could hear a whole variety of music on one station," Parker said.

He also said jazz in the '60s influenced today's genre because musicians like John Coltrane and Miles Davis incorporated rock sounds into jazz, which started a new trend in jazz still found today.

In theater, the Broadway show "Hair," about a young man who is drafted and getting ready to go to war, also influenced shows and music today. Parker said the show included rock elements and was one of the first shows on Broadway to have nudity on stage.

"Shows like 'Rent' and 'Phantom of the Opera' are all indebted to what was done in 'Hair,'" he said.

BOB DYLAN

BEHIND THE TRENDS

In the '60s, many of the trends from people and groups like the Beatles were brought from Europe. Brosdahl said it wasn't until after World War II and the French fashion industry shut down that the United States started its own fashion.

For our trends today, Day said designers look at what's going on in the world to find "the pulse of people."

"They're going to look at what's going on in architecture, art, music, even probably food trends," she said. "Everything that is going on, you kind of have to keep up with what that is. They're always going to see a different take on something."

Day said fashion designers in particular might go back and look at past ideas and then freshen them up to bring into the mainstream again.

UPCOMING MOVIES

"Doomsday" (R)

The year is 2008, and a pandemic threatens to wipe out the whole of the human race. For many in the United Kingdom — the epicenter of the outbreak — the end is nigh, so why bother to keep count? Within days of detection of the Reaper virus, millions are infected in Scotland, the killer diseases home turf. Government has no choice but to declare the country a hot zone and quarantine the populace in hopes of containing the Reapers spread.

"Dr. Seuss' Horton Hears a Who" (G)

The imaginative elephant Horton hears a cry for help coming from a tiny speck of dust floating through the air. Suspecting there might be life on that speck and despite a surrounding community which thinks he has lost his mind, Horton is determined to help.

"Never Back Down" (PG-13)

Jake Tyler has recently moved to Orlando, Fla., with his family to support his younger brother's shot at a professional tennis career. Jake was a star athlete on the football team at home, but in this new city he is an outsider with a reputation for being a quick tempered brawler.

"Funny Games" (R)

A middle-class family on vacation endures a terrifying ordeal at the hands of two psychopaths.

"Sleepwalking" (R)

A moving drama about the deep familial bond that develops between a 30-year-old man and his young niece after the girl's mother suddenly leaves town.

Forced out of her home after her boyfriend is arrested, Joleen Reedy needs a place to stay with her 11-year-old daughter, Tara.

"The Grand" (R)

Set around an international poker tournament. A middle-aged guy goes all-in to save his dead grandfather's hotel-casino from a real estate developer. His master plan is to win the world's most famous high stakes tournament, the Grand Championship of Poker.

Intercession is a special time at K-State—parking is easy, and life on campus is extremely pleasant. Intercession is an excellent way to take courses—it allows the student to pursue one course intensively, without interruptions and demands of other coursework or other campus activities. The relaxed atmosphere of the campus is a perfect setting for a highly concentrated course. Classes usually meet for three hours a day, providing time to focus on a subject in depth.

Perhaps the most attractive feature of Intercession is the opportunity for students to concentrate on one course at a time while earning extra credits to accelerate their programs. Both students and faculty find Intercession to be a rewarding experience.

Intercession offers courses of 1 to 3 credits each from a variety of departments and colleges. Tuition and registration procedures are explained in this brochure and on the web at www.dce.k-state.edu/courses/intercession. Questions about specific course content or requirements should be addressed to individual instructors. If this publication doesn't answer all your questions, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 785-532-5566 (toll free 1-800-432-8222).

Registration

Intercession is open to K-State students and to the public. Prior pre-enrollment at K-State is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Beginning March 24, 2008, students may register for May/August Intercession courses in one of three ways: any time, from anywhere via the web at www.dce.k-state.edu/courses/intercession; in person at the Division of Continuing Education (DCE), 131 College Court, 1615 Anderson Ave., Manhattan between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m.; OR, by phone at 785-532-5566 (toll free 1-800-432-8222) between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. KATS registration is not possible. Students may request a friend to enroll for them to maximize their chances of getting into their first-choice course. Registrations will be accepted through the first day of class; however, early enrollment is strongly encouraged. Classes are small and enrollments are limited.

No classes will be held on May 26, 2008 due to Memorial Day.

Students planning to use courses toward their degree requirements should check with their advisor to ensure that the Intercession courses selected meet their degree requirements. Also, students must clear any financial delinquencies to the University in order to register for Intercession.

“Go/No Go” Lists

The decisions about which Intercession courses “GO” will be based upon the number of registrations. The “Go/No Go” lists will be posted on our website—www.dce.k-state.edu/courses/intercession the week of April 28, 2008 and July 14, 2008.

Be Prompt!

Because most classes are small, courses fill quickly. Early enrollment is strongly recommended to secure a place in the class and ensure the course will be a “GO.” Although registrations are accepted through the first day of class, delays in student registration could result in courses being canceled. If a student wants to take an Intercession course, it is strongly recommended he/she enroll between March 24–April 25, 2008.

Late Enrollments

A $25 late fee will be charged for enrollments received after the first class meeting ends. No enrollments will be accepted after two-thirds of the class meetings have elapsed.

Tuition

On-campus coursework will be assessed at resident/non-resident tuition rates. Off-campus coursework will be assessed at a rate of $243 per undergraduate hour and $324 per graduate hour with no distinction made concerning the student's resident/non-resident status. The on-campus fee structure for coursework administered by the Division of Continuing Education is as follows:

	Resident	Non-resident
Undergraduate per credit hour	$199.50	$524.00
Graduate per credit hour	$266.50	$597.50

Additional fees may be assessed for courses in the College of Business, Architecture, and Engineering.

Student Fees and Health Fees

Student fees and health fees are collected on a per-day basis at the rate of $1. Fees for on-campus May/August courses are computed by multiplying the number of days of instruction for the course by the $1 student fee/health fee rate. The fees are not assessed for off-campus instruction or audits.

(Note, not all services offered are open between semesters. Please refer to page 16 of the K-State undergraduate catalog for further fee information.)

Billing

An electronic bill (eBill) detailing your tuition charges will be made available to you on the 15th of each month following your enrollment. Your eBill notification will be sent to your K-State e-mail address. All students must have an electronic ID (eID) in order to receive this e-mail. If you have not yet created your eID, see “eIDs and Passwords” at www.k-state.edu/infotech/welcome/ for instructions. To access e-mail sent to your K-State e-mail account, click on “E-mail” at the website above and read about “WebMail.” Students may also log in to the KATS website (<http://kats.k-state.edu>) with their eID to view/update their account and obtain their eBill statement.

Retakes

Undergraduate students may retake courses during Intercession in order to improve their grades. Students must indicate “Retake” on the enrollment form when they register for the courses.

Audit

Audit fees are calculated at the lowest tuition rate available for a particular course. Thus, if a course is offered for 1 or 2 undergraduate or graduate credit hours, the student is assessed the tuition for 1 undergraduate resident credit hour. No record is made on the academic transcript and no student/health fees are assessed.

Grades

Intercession grades will be averaged into the student's K-State GPA. Grades will be available to students on KATS three weeks after the last day of Intercession. The scholastic record of each undergraduate is evaluated twice yearly, at the end of the fall semester and at the end of the spring semester. The student's scholastic status does not change as a result of work taken in Intercession.

Students wishing to sign up for courses on an A-Pass-Fail basis must do so at the time of registration, or before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed.

Status Change

No status changes (e.g., undergraduate to graduate credit) will be accepted after half of the scheduled class meetings have been completed. All requests for status changes must be submitted in writing to the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office.

Incomplete Policy

If an “I” is received during Intercession, and if the student does not make up the “I” before the end of the following regular semester, a grade may be given by the faculty member without further consultation with the student. If, after the end of the semester, the “I” remains on the record, it will be designated as an “F” and will be computed in the student's GPA, weighted at 0 points per credit. The designation of “NR” (no grade reported) will be treated in a like manner.

Canceled Classes

The “GO/NO GO” notice will be posted on our web site—www.dce.k-state.edu/courses/intercession the week of April 28, 2008 and July 14, 2008. Students may also phone 785-532-5566 for information. Students who enrolled in a canceled class have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. To officially drop or add a class, students must do so in person at 131 College Court or in writing.

Withdrawals

1) A student may withdraw from a class by written request prior to the completion of one-third of the scheduled class meetings without a grade being recorded on the student's transcript. 2) If a student withdraws after one-third, but before two-thirds of the scheduled class meetings, a grade of W (Withdrawn) will be issued. 3) No withdrawals will be accepted after two-thirds of the scheduled classes have been completed.

Drop/Add Procedure

To drop or add a course, students must submit a drop/add form (or other written notice) to the Registration Office, Division of Continuing Education, 131 College Court. Students who fail to attend class may receive an “F” unless they formally drop the course.

Refunds

All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Division Registrar, Division of Continuing Education, 131 College Court Bldg.

A 100% tuition refund will be issued if the request is received prior to the completion of 20% of the course, or if the class is canceled. A 50% tuition refund will be issued if received on or before the completion of 25% of the course. No refunds will be issued after 25% of the course is completed or if the course is being audited. No refunds will be issued for lab or material fees collected at registration after the first day of class, unless the course is canceled.

Library

During Intercession, the Hale Library hours of operation vary.

Kansas Ethnic Studies Historic Nicodemus Kansas and Surrounding Communities

AMETH 560

05/19/2008 to 06/05/2008

1:00 p.m.–4:00 p.m. MTWUF

Using interdisciplinary methods, this course examines the American views of Kansas Black colonies of 1878-Present with an emphasis on Historic Nicodemus Kansas, through an exploration of written literary texts, technology and other expressive cultural forms such as religion, dance, art, song, oral history and storytelling. This course examines the history of Nicodemus Kansas and surrounding colonies of that era such as Catherine (Volga German) and Phillipsburg/Damar (Swedish and French), with emphasis on the life ways, cultural adaptation, and relations with Historic Nicodemus Kansas survival. In addition, a socio-historical framework will be used to help students understand racial and ethnic relations between the major colonies and will explore why Nicodemus survived when 30 such colonies like it did not.

No Class: May 23

June 5: All-Day Field Trip is planned to Nicodemus, Catherine, Damar, and Phillipsburg Kansas communities.

Bob Dylan's Literary Contexts

ENGL 295

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

9:00 a.m.–12:00 p.m. MTWUF

Recent years have seen an increasingly high level of academic interest in the work of Bob Dylan. As Dylan's oeuvre continues to grow it is important to consider his place in the American arts, and his contributions to language are just as important as his contributions to music. The main focus of the class would be on the text of Dylan's songs. Close readings of the lyrics would be supplemented with readings from critical articles, chapters from book-length studies of Dylan, and Dylan's own commentary, through both interviews and prose.

Course pack will be used.

HIST 200

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

6:00 p.m.–9:30 p.m. MTWU

An understanding of world history is essential to our understanding of ourselves. This course will introduce students to major themes and events in world history from our origin as a species to the global trends that affect us today. Special attention will be paid to Africa as a neglected, though important, component of world history, a perspective that will allow students to gain insight into the broader human experience. The course is designed to help students explore their and others' place in a smaller, more interconnected, global world.

Web Communication in Society

MC 112

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

1:00 p.m.–4:30 p.m. MTWUF

This course is an immersion into the web. In this course, you will learn that the web has a history (fairly brief), lots of controversy, and, therefore, plenty of articles devoted to making it clearer, making it more open, and making it simple. On the other hand, there are forces that wish to "improve" the web by making it more complex, making it more remote, and making it accessible by a chosen few (especially on the development side of things). This course will look at both sides of the issues, as well as plumb the depths of the following: Convergence, Mega-Media, The Commons, How the web works (and doesn't, Web personalities, Internet Radio, How to use the web to search for info, News and sports online, Marketing and advertising online, PR online, Web design and architecture, Social impact.

Death Penalty

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

1:00 p.m.–4:30 p.m. MTWUF

When news hits that a convicted prisoner kills again, or that an innocent person was executed, debates about the death penalty escalate, and in the end, it seems, most people still cling to long-held beliefs, regardless of evidence. This course chronicles America's experience with capital punishment, looking at debates on both sides of the aisle. A brief historical overview examines how the U.S. has gone from one of the least punitive systems to the world's harshest, what is working, and what is not. Recent developments with the death penalty, including moratoriums, issues with methods of death, and the execution of innocents has brought this important legal, political, and social issue to an uneasy juncture with the American public. The course examines facts, public opinion, execution patterns and methods, and various debates regarding punishment and deterrence. Selected cases and special topics provide application of class material.

Textbooks required: Paternoster, Raymond, Robert Brame, and Sarah Bacon. 2008. The Death Penalty: America's Experience with Capital Punishment. Oxford University Press. Bedau, Hugo Adam and Paul G. Cassell (Eds.). 2005. Debating the Death Penalty: Should Americans Have Capital Punishment? The Experts on Both Sides Make Their Case. Oxford University Press. ## Gender in American Film

05/19/2008 to 06/05/2008

9:30 a.m.–12:30 p.m. MTWU

This course will examine the problems and issues with depictions of gender in American film. Because gender does not exist within a vacuum, race/ethnicity, class, and sexuality will also be examined. This course will focus on how images in film reinforce and normalize power and power relations as well as perpetuate stereotypes. As such, in this course the screenings will be mainstream Hollywood films, but students will have the opportunity to examine other films such as independent productions for their term papers.

Event Planning Management

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

9:30 a.m. – 12:30 p.m. MTWUF

Event Planning is becoming a very popular and requested profession. Many businesses are in need of event planner's to help them with their events from business meetings to corporate fundraising campaigns. If you plan on becoming an Event Planner or you just want to know the job duties of an Event Planner, you'll enjoy this class. Event Planning Management is designed to help students learn the leadership and management skills needed to plan special events including project proposals, realistic timelines, budget management, delegating tasks, developing publicity, coordinating a team, managing group dynamics, leading meetings, handling emergencies, and evaluating an event. This course is designed to educate students on the variety of aspects involved in large and small-scale event planning including creating a vision, working with clients, understanding various marketing strategies, conference design, and assessment. This course will prepare students to work effectively with event stakeholders by exposing them to a greater understanding of both the structural and interpersonal aspects of leadership through event planning.

Introduction to LEED

ARE 720

05/19/2008 to 05/30/2008

1:00 p.m.–4:00 p.m. MTWUF

This course will provide an introduction and overview of green building principles and practices based on LEED (Leadership in Energy & Environmental Design), a leading-edge system for designing, constructing, operating and certifying the world's greenest buildings. The United States Green Building Council (USGBC) is a national nonprofit organization that is quickly growing with representation from throughout the building industry. LEED is the USGBC's primary vehicle for promoting sustainable design and construction. In the last few years, the building design and construction industry has seen a rapid growth in the focus on sustainable design and construction and the use of the LEED system.

Building Systems Installation and Commissioning

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

8:30 a.m.–12:30 p.m. MTWUF

Building commissioning is the process that assures the building owner will receive a building that meets their requirements, both in appearance and functionality. The commissioning process is a team approach to building design and delivery. It also documents the entire process from owner's inception through design, construction, and occupancy. The course will examine the commissioning process for the entire building. Commissioning of the mechanical and electrical systems is the largest component of the process, but the building envelope should also be included to complete the scope of work.

Topics in Construction Management: Tilt-Up Concrete Structures in Construction Management

CNS 644

05/19/2008 to 05/28/2008

12:00 p.m.–4:00 p.m. MTWUF

This class will cover current basic design procedures relating to slenderness, panel loading, connections, roof diaphragms, lifting analysis, temporary bracing, construction planning, construction procedures at the jobsite, erection, and safety procedures, along with discussion of concrete proportions and methods and types of finishes. The five steps of design, planning, construction, erection, and creating finishes are crucial to a successful tilt-up job. With preplanning between owner, contractor, concrete subcontractor, erection subcontractor, accessory supplies, and architect/engineer, tilt-up concrete construction can provide a quick, economical, and versatile method of constructing low and mid-rise buildings.

FSHS 300

05/19/2008 to 06/06/2008

9:00 a.m.–12:30 p.m. MTWUF

This course is intended to help students understand various components of death, society, and the human experience and to assist them in applying these concepts within a personal or professional realm. Students will be introduced to the grieving process, as well as the dying process. Various types of losses, such as the loss of a parent, sibling, child, or spouse, will be discussed, in addition to death by accident, suicide, homicide, and illness. This class will examine the American Death System as it currently exists and how it has evolved over time. Practical application of the subject matter, such as what to do and/or say to someone who is grieving, will be presented through lecture, personal testimonies, and professionals working in the death and dying field. Students will be encouraged to confront their own death anxiety and to learn to be comfortable with their own discomfort.

The History of the American Intelligence Community

HIST 200

6:00 p.m.–10:15 p.m. MTW

American history is replete with moments where timely information and action have often meant the difference between success and disaster. Utilizing both primary and secondary source material, this course will focus on the origins, evolution, and impact of the United States of America's governmental intelligence gathering apparatus on American policy and society. Among the topics to be discussed will be the government's response to feared and materialized threats to national security, the challenge of balancing national security needs with constitutional law and due process, the directives and methods of the United States Secret Service, Federal Bureau of Investigations (FBI), Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), National Security Agency (NSA), and the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) as well as the government's pursuit and prosecution of spies, attempts at congressional reform of argued "Rogue Elephant" elements of the intelligence community, and the use of covert operations as an expression of both domestic and foreign policy.

HIST 200

1:30 p.m.–5:00 p.m. MTWU

Sex and food are the two great needs of any species no one gets very far without a whole lot of both. While the study of human history deals greatly with the latter and other material demands, it has less to say about sex. This course will introduce students to American sexuality and its historical context. Students will explore sex and body image from the Puritans to today, including matters of race, class, marriage, work, and gender. The course is designed to help students tackle the changing reality of American sexuality by charting its historical currents in order to understand the past and explain the present.

Investigation ends with arrest

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two juveniles and one adult were detained and charged after an alleged attempted aggravated burglary at 1030 Ratone St., according to a Riley County Police Department report. Residents at that address woke up early Thursday morning to the sound of glass shattering and called police, said RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup.

The subjects fled the scene on foot, Moldrup said. As police responded to the crime, an officer spotted a vehicle leaving the street. The three males in the vehicle were detained and questioned.

The first juvenile in the vehicle was charged with attempted aggravated burglary, curfew violation, possession of drug paraphernalia and criminal possession of a weapon. Upon searching the vehicle, police found 5.4 grams of marijuana and a butterfly knife belonging to the first subject, Moldrup said. He was taken into custody and released to his mother.

The second juvenile was charged with attempted burglary and a curfew violation, and Ricco Hall, of 917 Colorado St., was charged with aggravated burglary and contributing to a child's misconduct or deprivation. His bond was posted at $10,000.

The victims' damages totaled $400.

ROAD CLOSING

Between the dates of March 15 and March 31, 17th St. will be closed from Poyntz Avenue to Yuma Street in order to accommodate the construction of a new water line.

Drivers wanting to travel 17th Street will have to take a different route starting Saturday morning. The city's contractor, Underground Developers, will be closing 17th Street from Poyntz Avenue to Yuma Street from the morning of March 15 until March 31.

Residents of the area and emergency traffic will still be able to proceed through the area with caution, said Peter Armesto, assistant director of water.

The city plans to install a new water line while the road is closed.

"It will definitely pose an inconvenience to people in the area," Armesto said. "Water will remain on for the most part. We do have a couple tie-ins when the new water line will be connected to the existing water line, and the water will be shut off temporarily for a couple of hours."

Armesto said the water line will improve

Gospel concert unifies, motivates young audience

By David L. Griffin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students tend to focus on the career that lies ahead, but they often forget God's purpose for them, said a former Dallas Cowboys chaplain Thursday night.

"We are not just serving the purposes of a career, we are serving the purposes of God," said the Rev. Tony Evans, speaker at the "One Night for the King" concert at the College Avenue United Methodist Church. "We need to be God's representative in the careers we are in."

The event was sponsored by K-State Workers of Wisdom campus ministries, a group whose campus spiritual leaders have been encouraging students to worship and meet God.

"God is so worthy," said Jahvelle Rhone, who was the main coordinator for the event, as he welcomed a sanctuary filled with Manhattan residents and K-State students.

Rhone, junior in open option, said the night was all about worshipping the Lord in the right way.

"Tonight, I really think there's going to be a form of unity on this campus that hasn't been seen in a long time," he said. "I really think that God is going to move, and also I think that people's eyes will be opened."

"This is a great night for campus ministries," Rhone said. "We are doing something great tonight by telling college students that we can have a purpose."

Several campus ministries including Prajin, Campus Crusade for Christ and InterVarsity Christian Fellowship were in attendance as well as some Manhattan churches.

A local all-female quintet followed Rhone and sang songs of worship and praise. The first selection had congregation members waving their hands in the air as they listened intently and sang along.

A second selection was more upbeat, causing the entire room to stand, clap and sing, and dance.

Emotions ran high throughout the evening, as some members of the audience cried while Tony's son, Anthony Evans, the evening's featured vocalist, sang worship songs.

As he took the stage, he thanked the audience for allowing him and his father to come to Manhattan and worship with the community.

"I am not here to worship

Local residents discuss effects of city-wide smoking ban on businesses

Rusty Wilson, founder of Rusty's Last Chance and Kite's Bar and Grill, gives his feedback on the issue of a smoking ban in Aggieville establishments Thursday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five members of the Manhattan community from various fields and backgrounds came together Thursday in the K-State Student Union to talk about a possible smoking ban.

K-State's Student Governing Association sponsored the forum to provide a smoke-free Manhattan.

SGA is trying to inform people about the risks of public smoking and encourage them to back the idea of prohibiting smoking in public bars and restaurants. There are currently 27 smoke-free Kansas cities.

"If this was really just a nuisance, I don't think we would be working so hard. Eight hours in a smoky bar is like smoking 15 cigarettes. For those smoking cigarettes, they actually have a filter," said Marcia Locke, public relations and outreach coordinator at the Johnson Cancer Center.

Rusty Wilson, founder of Rusty's Last Chance, opened the first smoke-free bar in Aggieville. He also opened a smoke-free side to Kite's Bar and Grill and - because of the success - has also created a smoke free bar in Kansas City.

"There are 18 bars in Aggieville, and only two of them are smoke free - that puts me at a disadvantage," Wilson said. "It's a very competitive area, and we are just looking for an equal playing field. Many owners I have talked to know the ban is inevitable but are not going to change until forced to."

Wilson also said the ban would take some adjusting at first. He said business would suffer first, but then pick up.

"Specific places might have a problem, but for the whole city, there would be no change economically, I believe," Locke said.

Locke said students should support the ban because most employees of Manhattan bars and restaurants are K-State students. She said they are not thinking about their health, but rather what seems more important right now - money. She said they should not have to risk their health at work.

Dr. James Gardner, internal medicine physician in Manhattan, said the most common disease in U.S. is vascular disease, and secondhand smoke contributes to acute diseases, like heart disease.

Criminologist discusses gender, urban inequality among African Americans

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Youths' descriptions fit quite closely to scholars' examinations of how structural inequalities negatively impact neighborhood residents and negatively impact the ability to generate social ties and protective networks necessary to combat crime," said Jody Miller, associate professor in the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice at the University of Missouri-St. Louis.

Miller presented a lecture about her book "Getting Played: African American Girls, Urban Inequality and Gendered Violence," which was released March 1. Miller's lecture focused on Chapter 2 in "Getting Played," entitled "Gender 'n the Hood: Neighborhood Violence Against Women and Girls."

The book's research methodology involved qualitative, in-depth interviews with 35 young women and 40 young men. The men and women were African American and lived in "distressed urban neighborhoods" in St. Louis.

The median age of those interviewed was 16, and the subjects were not selected at random sample, Miller said.

She also said her research did not intentionally include more young men interviewees than young women.

Miller read anecdotes from those who were interviewed. One young woman, Chesnay, described her neighborhood in the following quote: "Terrible. Every man for they self. Ghetto in the sense of raggedy, people uncool to people."

The book's title "Getting Played" came from disputes among youth about whether sexual and violent behavior toward women was harmful or "play," Miller said.

"Boys often used the terminology of 'play' to say that what they were doing was not serious — that it was humorous, that it was all in good fun," Miller said. "Girls were very ambivalent about what exactly to make of that."

Of the young women interviewed for "Getting Played," Miller said 54 percent reported some form of sexual victimization. Many of the young women interviewed used "respect yourself, protect yourself" strategies when they encountered violence in their urban neighborhoods, Miller said.

Other strategies they used included avoiding public places all the time or at night; relying on the company of others for protection; and drawing security from neighborhood networks of family members and friends for protection, Miller said.

Miller also said limitations occur with these strategies, which include limitations on young women's participation in public and reliance on those who might be victimizers.

K-State's Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, the Women's Studies Program, the Dow Chemical Multicultural Resource Center and the Sociology Graduate Student Association sponsored Miller's lecture.

Michelle Bemiller, assistant professor of sociology, said she had her criminology class read Miller's 1998 article "Up It Up: Gender and the Accomplishment of Street Robbery" before Miller spoke with the class Thursday.

Miller's 2001 book "One of the Guys: Girls, Gangs and Gender" examined women as offenders.

As an important contributor to feminist criminology, Miller's research looks at women as victims of violence and as potential offenders, Bemiller said.

"I think, in general, it's Jody Miller, associate professor of criminology at the University of Missouri, St. Louis, gives a presentation on urban inequality and gender violence in the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union Thursday afternoon.

safe to say girls and women were ignored for a very long time in criminology and seen only as victims and not offenders," Bemiller said.

Joe Graseola, senior in sociology, said he was already aware of several issues Miller addressed from his previous classes.

"However, it was really interesting to hear a qualitative interview process and getting to see the actual quotes of what people saw in their communities and neighborhoods," Graseola said. "We really need that more — what people are seeing most of the time. I guess I didn't realize the level that gender plays in a neighborhood like that and how women are basically minimized and taught to deal with sexual violence and nothing much is done about it."

Students see social, economic issues while studying abroad

By Tierra Gordon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's study abroad program allows students to explore the world and experience new cultures while still cracking the books.

Elizabeth Ward, director of the study abroad program, said the main reason students study abroad is because it's the one time in their lives they can take advantage of living in another country.

Danielle English, senior in journalism and mass communications, studied in Queretaro, Mexico, for six weeks. She said she went for an in-depth opportunity to experience Hispanic culture because she has a Spanish minor. English also said she has family there that she has never met, so she wanted to live as they do every day.

Mallory Loveridge, senior in finance who studied abroad in Cairns, Australia, for five months, said she had wanted to go to Australia ever since she had taken a geography class her freshman year in college. She also discovered that Australia is a booming country for business, which relates to her major.

After traveling by herself, Loveridge said, "It was a really good thing. I became more independent."

Both English and Loveridge were well prepared before the trip and talked to other students who studied abroad in the areas they traveled to.

"We had a class session with the professor who came with us and watched a movie about Mexico, the history and politics of it," English said.

Students said studying abroad allowed them to learn about a variety of subjects outside of their majors and about people as a whole.

"The biggest thing I learned was that there are unique people all over the world," Loveridge said.

For students who are accustomed to Manhattan, studying abroad might serve as an outlet for them to see that the world is much different outside of Kansas, Loveridge said.

"I learned a lot more about socioeconomic levels," English said. "I saw more poverty there than what I would have seen here in Manhattan."

Both students said it took some adjustment to get back into their routines once they came back to K-State.

"You really get immune to the country that you are studying in, no matter how long you study there," Loveridge said. "It was weird to come back here because everything is so uptight. In Australia, it's really laid back."

English also said it was strange to come back to the U.S. and not hear much Spanish like she did in Mexico.

Not only did the students bring back valuable learning experiences from studying abroad, they said they had fun during their visits to foreign countries.

English said her best experiences were going camping for the first time and visiting many dance clubs.

Loveridge said diving was her favorite Australian activity. She also said she enjoyed Australia's beautiful beaches and going camping.

Studying abroad will give students more well-rounded experience in their college careers, English said.

"Whether studying emerging markets in China, agriculture in Costa Rica or architecture in Italy, education abroad can help prepare students for their academic and professional futures in a changing world," Ward said.

TO THE POINT

Collegian comments on Beatles, cell phones

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected comments.

To the person who doesn't like the Beatles: There's seriously something wrong with you. I challenge you to listen to "Yellow Submarine" or "I am the Walrus" and not be entertained.

This forum comment should not even be necessary. There is not a band today that has not been influenced in some way by them.

Word to the wise: Delivery drivers can turn narc very quickly. Please, please tip.

There are members of the editorial staff who have been delivery drivers. We would just like to say that it is not a power to be ignored. Also, some people tip and some don't. It isn't an insult if they don't.

Is Ugg season almost over?

YES! YES! YES! Not only is "Ugg" short for ugly, they are the dumbest boots ever. It will never be clear how something so Uggly can weasel its way onto the feet of so many.

To the people who walk and text-message at the same time: I hope you walk into a wall.

This is very annoying. Especially when they walk in the middle of the sidewalk. Please understand texting while driving is just as dangerous.

Dirty laundry

Government officials should clean own closets first

New York Gov. Eliot Spitzer has a lot of explaining to do after charges surfaced of his involvement in a prostitution ring on Monday. The New York Times reported that "the [federal] wiretap captured a man identified as Client 9 on a telephone call confirming plans to have a woman travel from New York to Washington, where he had reserved a hotel room. The person briefed on the case and the law enforcement official identified Mr. Spitzer as Client 9."

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Spitzer, who was the attorney general for the state of New York for eight years before becoming governor in January 2007, had received recognition for cases involving protection of the environment and low-wage workers. Spitzer had been wiretapped after the IRS reported that a "significant amount of money had been suspiciously transferred from one account to another," according to the article "Sources: Money Transfers Spurred Spitzer Probe" published Wednesday on CNN.com. These money transfers required the filing of a Suspicious Activity Report by federal law. After investigating the transfers, CNN.com reported the FBI Corruption Squad linked them to a prostitution ring known as the Emperors Club. CNN sources reported Spitzer used the prostitution service at least eight times in recent months.

On Wednesday, Spitzer resigned, leaving Lt. Governor David Paterson to step up and take office at noon on March 17. This seems to be the most graceful move, according to the Governor's Internet page on www.ny.gov. Spitzer has three daughters and has been married to his wife, Silda, since 1987.

But perhaps it isn't the fact that he has a family that forced his resignation but rather the conflicting issue of saying one thing and doing another. Spitzer, who is known for cracking down on Wall Street corruption, had also prosecuted prostitution rings during his time as New York state attorney general.

During a public announcement Spitzer stated, "Over the course of my public life, I have insisted — I believe correctly — that people, regardless of their position or power, take responsibility for their conduct. I can and will ask no less of myself." At least he recognizes his own hypocrisy.

One of the problems of political leaders is they believe they will never be caught, which is a large risk because they have more to lose than the average U.S. citizen.

They have their national and state reputations at stake, with newspapers reporting their dirty little secrets and national groups calling for their resignation before their aides even know the full story.

While a majority of politicians probably get away with more crimes than the public will ever know, Spitzer's desire for a high-class prostitute has again brought political scandal to the forefront.

Politicians are real people with real pasts, but if they are standing in front of the voting public, promising to stop corruption and free the government of political scandal, they should clean up the garbage in their own lives first.

Race card: Acknowledgment of racial privilege not racism

I am black. I know you're surprised by that, but bear with me. My life experiences have had a great deal to do with my race. The food I love, the music I grew up listening to, the color I am all at least partially due to my skin color. And there are any number of opportunities I have been both given and denied because of it. It is not racist to say that.

MARQUIS CLARK

According to the Associated Press, the Barack Obama campaign has set its sites on former Democratic vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro. Ferraro is in trouble for the following statement: "If Obama was a white man, he would not be in this position." She later clarified her position by saying, "I referred again back to the historic campaign of mine, and I said in 1984, if my name had been Gerard Ferraro instead of Geraldine Ferraro, I would never have gotten the nomination. It doesn't mean that I wasn't capable of doing the job. I certainly was. I believe that if we had gotten elected, I not only would have been a good vice president, but I would have probably run for president in 1992."

Since I'm also black, let me say what you're all thinking — Obama would not be in this position if he was not black. He would not speak the way he speaks if he was not black. He would not have the life experiences he has had; he would not strike the chord he strikes, he would not stand in the gap between privilege and oppression if he was not black. All of his attributions as a candidate are the summation of his character, like any other candidate. Is he talented? Prepared? Qualified? Absolutely.

In the United States, only minorities have race and only women have gender. We don't say that George Washington would definitely not have been president if he were black or a woman. But it is true. He wouldn't have been allowed to lead, no matter his talent for doing so. Thankfully, many blacks and women in positions of power are in those positions because of a long overdue societal backlash against that type of thinking.

My advice to Sen. Obama is to embrace privilege. Being black in America has rarely been so valuable. Remember that whites in Iowa and Vermont have campaigned with equal voracity and voted for Obama in equal numbers as blacks in Mississippi and Alabama.

Remember that a racialized America shapes all of our identities and it would benefit us all to analyze the ways in which we are both privileged and limited by our racial heritage. Use this as an opportunity to celebrate the fact that two black conservatives sit in positions of significant power and one black liberal runs for the highest office in the land, and their blackness serves as a benefit and not a hindrance.

Barack, your father was a Muslim, your mother was white and you live in a country that a half-century ago destined you for domestic — not public — service. You remind a country of both a black civil rights leader and a white president. You speak in black churches in the South and at predominantly white rallies in the North and both audiences are hopeful. Move the discussion back to the issues at hand — the ones that affect all Americans, regardless of race.

Who cares how you got to this point? Now that you are here, what will you do?

Students travel U.S., help out over break

By David L. Griffin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students are taking advantage of their spring breaks to help those in need around the U.S.

The K-State Community Service Program's Alternative Spring Break is an opportunity for students to participate in an intense service experience during their week off from classes. Participants travel to communities around the country where they work with local residents to address a pressing social issue.

Kim Frazier, who works with AmeriCorps VISTA, which stands for Volunteers in Service to America, said students have participated in the Alternative Spring Break for the past 10 years. She said she sees it as an opportunity for students who enjoy travel and community service to get out of Kansas for an affordable price during spring break. The trip itself is $175 and covers travel, housing and some meals.

"Students are really interested in doing community service, and this is a really easy way for them to get stuff done," Frazier said.

Mariam Bahadori, junior in psychology, will be traveling to New Orleans with a team of K-State students to participate in Alternative Spring Break.

"It's a great opportunity to get out and help those in need. It sounds fun and very beneficial to everyone," Bahadori said.

The students on this trip will be split up into three different teams, with each one participating in a different project.

One group will work with Disciples Home Mission to rebuild houses. Another project involves working with animal rescue, and the third group will focus on the "Green project," which collects and reuses recyclables.

"Everyone is always very gracious that people are there to help, and it's a cool opportunity," Frazier said.

KU professor to speak on future of Africa

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Author and educator Dr. Garth Myers will speak on Africa's plans for the future at 3:30 today in the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union.

Myers, whose visit is sponsored by the K-State African Student Union, will give a speech entitled "What do Africa's Urban Poor Think of Pro-poor Planning?"

Myers is an associate professor in African and African-American Studies in the Department of Geography at the University of Kansas and is director of the Kansas African Studies Center. This center is one of nine federally funded National Resource Centers for Africa with Foreign Language Area Studies fellowship status. Myers received both his doctorate in geography and master's degree in African studies from the University of California-Los Angeles. He also received his BA in History from Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine.

"He has sound knowledge in African geography and economics and since [KU] is near to K-State, it reduces transportation and other expenses," said Daba Gedafa, president of African Student Union.

Gedafa, doctoral candidate and graduate research assistant in civil engineering, said the purpose of the event is to increase awareness of contemporary issues in Africa among K-State students, faculty, staff and the Manhattan community.

Two years ago, the African Student Union helped establish an African Studies Center at K-State to promote research and education on African issues.

David Hartnett, African Student Union faculty advisor, said the organization identified at least three dozen faculty members who perform some sort of research on Africa, which contributed to the establishment of the studies center.

"The African Studies Center is a way to pull faculty together that have interest in African studies and work together to promote the study of Africa on campus," he said.

Hartnett, professor of biology, said the center will also develop more opportunities for students, including study abroad programs and more research on Africa.

Hartnett said the lecture is another opportunity for K-State students to learn about a different part of the world. He also said he applauds Gedafa and the African Student Union for their hard work and taking the initiative to conduct the entire event on their own.

For more information on how to join the K-State African Student Union, please visit its Web site at www.ksu.edu/asu or email africa@ksu.edu.

Equestrian team hoping to end season with win

By Jonathan Wright
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite losing five of its last six shows, the K-State equestrian team is looking to finish its season on a positive note in its last competition of the regular season when the Fresno State Bulldogs come to Manhattan.

The show, which will begin at 10 a.m. today at Manhattan's Fox Creek Farms, comes just five days after the Wildcats fell to Georgia. Though quick, Western coach Casie Williamson said the team is not worried about the turnaround.

"It's not the first time it's happened this year," Williamson said. "It is hard. You only have four days to get ready for it, but we don't really feel like we need to play catch up from last week's competition. We know all the basic things, and we just have to get comfortable with our patterns and tests."

K-State enters the show with a record of 5-6, while Fresno State enters with a record of 4-4 on the season. Eighteen Wildcat riders will compete against the Bulldogs.

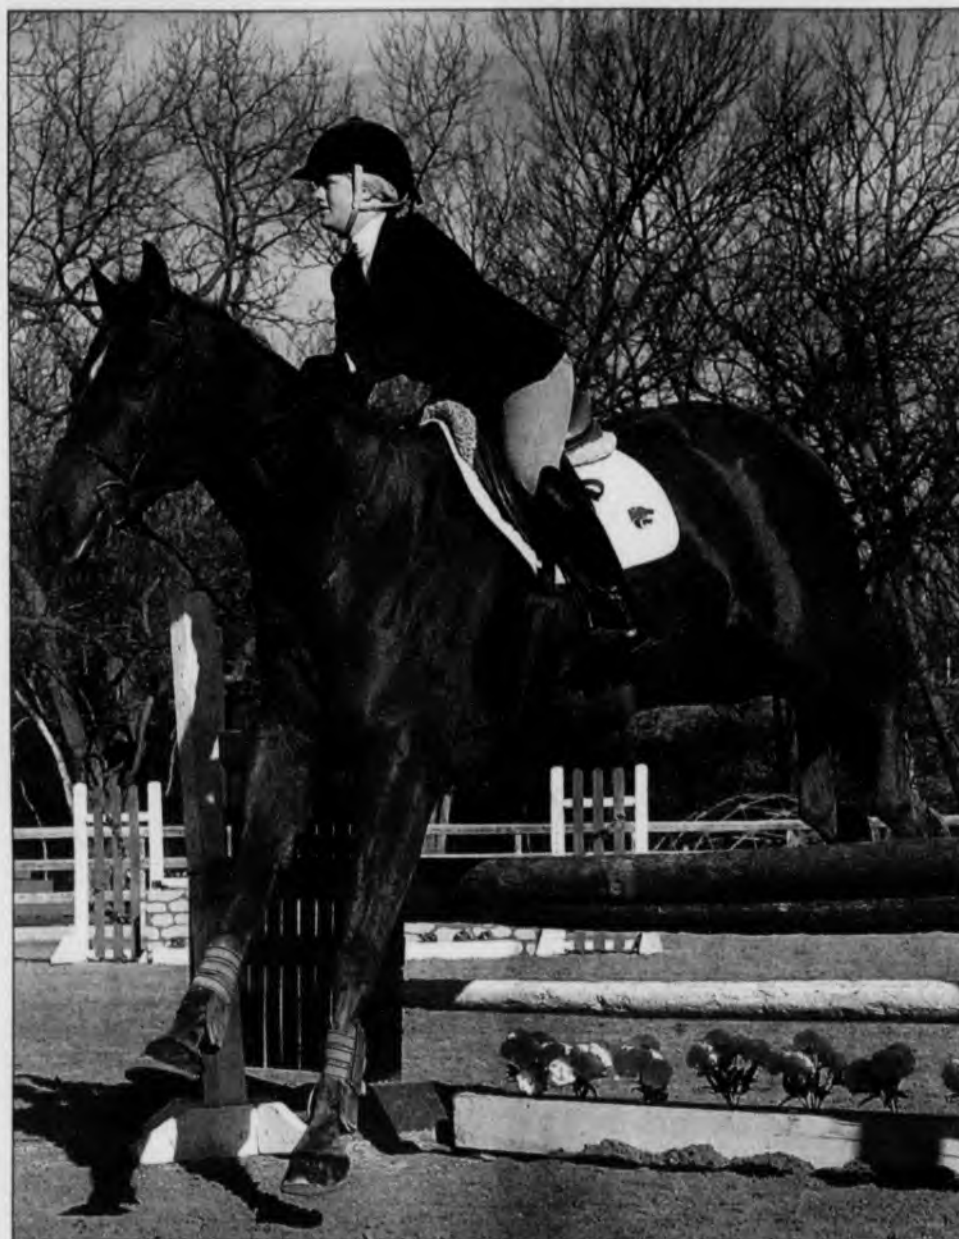

Leading the English squad is senior Whitney Snyder, who won her thirteenth competition last week against Georgia. Freshman Julie Wolfert, who picked up her first varsity win and MVP award last week, will be riding for the English squad as well.

On the Western side, junior Alyssa Freeman should lead the young squad. She is hoping to finish strong as the Central Championships and National Championships take place in the upcoming weeks.

"The team is full of very talented riders," Freeman said. "If we continue to work hard, we are capable of accomplishing our goal, which is to walk away with a national championship."

Leading the way with Freeman will be sophomore Laura Browne, who is 6-3-2 on the season with one MVP award, and sophomore Tara Hallan, who has yet to lose this season with a 3-0-1 record.

English coach Ashley Foster said it is important that K-State finishes its season on a strong note.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

During the final section of Equitation over Fences, Whitney Snyder, senior in social science, got a 71-52 win in English style competition over Georgia. Despite Snyder's win, the Wildcats lost 11-5 on Sunday.

"If we can perform as close to perfect as possible this weekend, it will give our riders the confidence they need going into the Central Championships and the National Championships," Foster said.

On Saturday, five riders will compete in an Intercollegiate Horse Show Association

Western Show, in the Quad Cities, Iowa at Black Hawk College. Senior Dana Totten, juniors Alden Haugh and Valerie Dysart, sophomore Nicole Keenan, and freshman Nicole Allen will ride for the Wildcats. Totten will also be riding in the IHSA regional competition Sunday at Black Hawk College.

Media pressures players too early

As many of you might have heard, K-State's freshman basketball sensation Michael Beasley, has repeatedly said in interviews with national media that he does not feel he is ready for the NBA.

In a recent interview with ESPN.com's Dana O'Neil, Beasley stated the NBA is still a dream to him and he is just enjoying the experience of being a college kid. He is still a kid at heart, and that is part of the reason he is such a joy to cover.

In an interview with ESPN's First Take in January, he was asked about the NBA and about being a one-and-done player. He emphasized in the interview that he wanted to be a student-athlete, not an athletic student.

The interviewers gave a slight smirk to each other, as if doubting the comments made by the Wildcat phenom.

However, when Beasley makes one of these comments, it is put under the microscope by the national media. Sports-writers argue that he is just saying the right things and doesn't really mean them.

Many sports-talk shows have said he would be an idiot to stay in college and not head for the NBA. Why do the media act like we know more about Beasley than he knows about himself?

Where have we come as a society today to say that a kid would be an idiot to stay in school and not head for the money? Staying in school and receiving an education used to be encouraged, but the media has discouraged that goal by calling a kid crazy for wanting to stick around college a little longer.

Rather than making the story of Beasley wanting to stay into a positive, the national media questions why a potential lottery pick would return to college.

Whenever I turn the channel to ESPN to check out college basketball highlights, all of the talk and highlights center around the outstanding freshmen, the so-called "diaper dandies."

ESPN uses these kids to get viewers, and when they're gone, they are often forgotten about. Last year, all we heard about from ESPN personalities was how great Kevin Durant of the Texas Longhorns was. Every night there seemed to be non-stop highlights of Durant flowing through television sets around the nation.

This year, all the talk about Beasley's good friend, Durant, has simmered after his departure to the professional ranks, and the media's attention has switched to the new freshmen class in college basketball.

Beasley is touted by most experts to be the consensus No. 1 pick in the upcoming NBA draft, but that doesn't mean he has to go. So, K-State fans, don't give up hope just yet on the prospect of Beasley returning to college.

He is a different individual and player than Durant, Greg Oden and Carmelo Anthony.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Tennis team to face 3 teams in 5 days, starting today

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A trio of key matches awaits the K-State women's tennis team over the next week as it attempts to erase a five-match losing streak.

The Wildcats (4-5, 0-1 Big 12 Conference) meet Missouri at noon today in Columbia, Mo. Sunday, K-State will travel to Boulder, Colo., to go up against the Colorado Buffaloes at 11 a.m. K-State will then face Iowa at 1 p.m. March 19 at the Washburn Tennis Facility at the Peters Recreation Complex.

Coach Steve Bietau said that the team's approach to facing Big 12 foes again would not change.

"The nonconference people we've played have been good," he said. "What we have to do to be successful doesn't change, whether we're playing Colorado or Iowa."

Missouri (8-5, 0-1 Big 12) enters today's match fresh off a 7-0 loss to Colorado. Junior Sofia Ayala and freshman Maureen Modesto lead singles play for Missouri. Ayala has posted an 11-5 record, primarily as the No. 6 singles player. Modesto boasts a 19-9 record and has spent the majority of the spring season as the Tigers' No. 4 singles player.

Senior Chrissy Svetlic and freshman Mallory Weber have posted Missouri's best doubles record this year. The duo has a 12-7 record in the No. 1 doubles spot.

Colorado (4-6, 1-0 Big 12) is in the midst of a three-match winning streak. Most recently, the Buffaloes topped Yale 7-0 on March 11. Sophomore Melissa Esposito and junior Franziska Jendrian, who have posted singles records of 12-8 and 13-6 respectively, lead the Buffaloes.

In doubles play, senior Gleisy Torres Torres and freshman Abbie Probert lead the Buffaloes. The duo, which has mostly played the No. 3 spot this season, currently has a record of 8-2.

The Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 38 Iowa Hawkeyes (8-1, 1-0 Big Ten Conference) will be nine days removed from a 6-1 loss to No. 24 Denver when they meet K-State on March 19. Senior Kayla Berry and freshman Lynne Poggensee-Wei have been the top doubles team for the Hawkeyes this season. The touted tandem has a 7-0 record this spring.

has been a top performer for Iowa in singles play this season. Against Denver, the senior from tied the Iowa school record for career singles wins.

Despite the burden of five straight losses, senior Olga Klimova said players' attitudes are still positive.

"Even though we are on a losing streak, we'll still be positive," she said. "Our attitudes haven't changed. We can still improve, but it hasn't been negative."

At this point in the season, Bietau noted the stakes are high for the young Wildcat squad.

"It's an important point for us right now," he said. "We still have a good team here. Fifty percent of our line-up is first — and second — year players. We're asking them to carry a big load, and there have been both good and bad times."

Baseball faces tough upcoming schedule

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team opens its Big 12 Conference season when the Nebraska Cornhuskers arrive in Manhattan today.

The Wildcats will begin a three-game weekend series against the Huskers at 4 p.m. today at Tointon Family Stadium. Coach Brad Hill's squad is currently riding a four-game winning streak, but will have to play well against a strong Nebraska team with a 10-game winning streak.

As was the case Tuesday against Washington State, K-State will have to face a pitching ace, Nebraska's Johnny Dorn (2-0, 1.35 ERA).

A three-year letterman and all-Big 12 performer who is also second all-time in Nebraska history for victories, Dorn will pitch against a Wildcat team that has been strong offensively lately.

Averaging more than eight runs a game over the last four home contests, the Wildcats will look to build on their recent streak.

Taking the mound for the Wildcats will be senior pitcher Brad Hutt (1-2, 2.25 ERA). Hutt is one of only two Big 12 pitchers to have already thrown a complete game in the 2008 season. In his last outing, Hutt pitched six solid innings against the University of Texas at San Antonio, when he gave up seven hits and two runs.

This season, third baseman Nate Tenbrink has been the leader offensively for the Wildcats.

Tenbrink has hit .370 with two homeruns and 12 RBI, and he is leading the team with 11 stolen bases.

Junior-college transfer Dane Yelovich has improved his season average to .400. Yelovich was originally a walk-on, but after a stellar fall when he was named team MVP during the Fall World Series when he hit .526, he earned a roster spot.

Saturday's game at 2 p.m. will feature Nebraska pitcher Thad Weber (2-1, 7.16 ERA) against K-State's Chase Bayuk (0-1, 5.22 ERA). Starting pitchers for the third and final game of the series on Sunday at 1 p.m. are Aaron Pribanic (2-0, .096 ERA) for Nebraska and Justin Murray (1-0, 1.54 ERA) for K-State.

The team will travel to Provo, Utah, Tuesday for a two-game set against Brigham Young, followed by another three-game series next weekend when the Wildcats host Binghamton.

all who left after their first year of college and headed for the sure-fire money. We shouldn't be so quick to lump Beasley into the same category as them. He has an infatuation with SpongeBob SquarePants at the age of 19, and there's nothing wrong with that. Beasley wants to be a kid — he wants to enjoy college life, and who are the media to try and say he should do otherwise?

Just maybe, Beasley will change the thinking of society and prove the media wrong. Sometimes it's not always about the money; it's about enjoying life the way you want to live it. Despite what the media and experts say, Beasley might just love the college life enough to stick around a little longer.

Wildcats look to get back on track

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team will look to get back on track Monday as it travels to Austin, Texas, for the Betsy Rawls Longhorn Invitational at the University of Texas Golf Club.

The three-day, 54-hole tournament will be one of the toughest fields the Wildcats have seen this season, featuring 17 teams overall, all of which are ranked in Golfweek.com's Top 100, with ten of them in the Web site's Top 50.

However, coach Kristi Knight said she isn't concerned about with other teams' rankings.

"For us to be successful we have to focus on our own individual games," Knight said. "We need to worry about our own scores and not press and get ahead of ourselves. We don't worry about rankings; each one of our five team members just needs to take care of their own business and not worry about what the other teams are doing."

The Wildcats have struggled in their last two tournaments, placing 15th in the Central District Invitational in Parrish, Fla., and placing 16th in the University of Nevada at Las Vegas Spring Rebel Invitational. Knight said the upcoming schedule should help the team out.

"We are going to have a short and focused practice today and identify and correct some things for individuals," Knight said. "I think it will be good playing back-to-back tournaments even though the result wasn't very good for us. There were some positive things that happened that we can build on, and getting right back out there should be beneficial for us."

The Wildcats hope to regain their fall form, when they garnered four top-three finishes in five tournaments. For that to happen, Knight said her team needs to relax and trust themselves out on the course.

"I told the team Wednesday that they need to focus on the process of executing the shot," Knight said. "They just have to trust their swing and just worry about the next shot rather than worrying about what happened earlier. If all five team members stay focused, then we are going to be fine."

Rowing to have 1st action of spring

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State rowing team will look to carry over its success from the fall season into the spring season when it travels to Austin, Texas, this weekend to participate in the Longhorn Invitational.

Expectations are high after the Wildcats won three event titles during the season opener at Des Moines, Iowa, and recaptured the Sunflower Showdown title after sweeping rival KU in the fall.

With Kansas weather particularly unpredictable this winter, the Wildcats have had little practice time on Tuttle Creek Reservoir to prepare for the spring season. Along with Texas, K-State will also face KU at the invitational.

After competing at Texas this weekend, K-State will travel to California to compete in the San Diego Crew Classic on April 5. Then the team will travel to Lawrence to participate in the Kansas Cup on April 12. The Wildcats will make the first of two trips to Oak Ridge, Tenn., to compete in the Southern Intercollegiate Rowing Association Regatta on April 18.

The Big 12 Rowing Invitational concludes the regular season on May 3, when the Wildcats will again compete against KU and Texas.

PEOPLE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Dietician controls recipes for thousands of students in residence halls

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michelle Netson doesn't think about food in measurements of cups and teaspoons. Instead, she uses pounds and liters in her recipes to feed thousands of mouths everyday.

Netson is the Computation project leader for Housing and Dining Services. The Computation Recipe Management System is a total recipe and inventory management system for the dining centers on campus that K-State converted to in 2005 after switching from its 30-year-old recipe system. It holds more than 7,000 breakfast, lunch and dinner recipes.

"There's everything, from something as simple as grilled cheese or macaroni and cheese," Netson said. "We have recipes for gelatin salads all the way up to more complicated recipes that might have two or three recipes involved in making one dish."

IN THE BEGINNING

Netson is a registered dietician and graduated with both her bachelor's in dietetics and master's degrees in adult education from K-State. After working as a dietician at Kramer Dining Center for a few years, she took 15 years off to raise her four daughters, and then she came back to the university in 1993. She worked as an early shift manager and then later became the Computation project leader.

When Netson started the project, she said she was not "computer savvy," though it has taught her much.

"It's been a real challenge, but I was ready for a challenge," she said. "Sometimes you can enjoy your job, but you need to take it to the next level, and that's what this has done for me."

Netson said the system not only holds recipes and inventory, but it is also an ordering system and cost system and holds history about the recipes.

OPEN TO ALL

Anyone can suggest a recipe idea, Netson said. She said students often request recipes from home, and then a recipe developer tries to adapt it. Adaptation from home recipes can be difficult because of the conversions to make mass quantities for the halls.

Netson said some of the recipes have been unusual, like baked beans with root beer. Recently, Van Zile Dining Center had fried alligator meat on its menu.

Netson also has contributed to the recipes, including her family recipe for chip chocolate cake that is made at the dining halls.

"It's just a family recipe, and it's super simple, which is kind of my style," she said. "It's not a special event cake, just an easy, really good chocolate cake."

Sometimes a recipe is adapted that the hall leaders decide not to use, but Netson still keeps it in the system.

"That's why we have 7,000 recipes, because we don't get rid of any of them," she said. "We have recipes for rabbit, and we haven't served rabbit in a really long time. But once you develop the recipe and you go to all the work, it's easier to inactivate it and still have it, because you never know when you'll want to pull it up and use it again."

Of the 7,000 recipes, typically 200 are used daily by the staff at Derby Dining Center to feed approximately 500 people at breakfast, 1,300 at lunch and 1,400 at dinner. Of the three dining center on campus, Derby is the largest and produces food products for the other centers on a limited scale. Netson said different shifts of workers that start at 5:30 a.m. prepare the recipes for the day.

NOT JUST A COOK

Besides working with the system, Netson also consults with dining hall residents who have dietary issues and teaches the class Food Production Management, where students evaluate the products they make.

"It's fun," Netson said. "There's a lot of things that enter into this kind of profession. Food science, human relationships, personnel management, just the dynamics of working with students on campus. That's why it's never boring and such a neat field to be in."

Netson said her family is important to her, and pictures of her four daughters and new granddaughter surround her desk. She said each of her daughters were always in charge of a night of cooking growing up. Now, three of those grown daughters love to cook, though one does not.

"I like to try new recipes at home, too," Netson said. "I have this theory about trying new recipes at home. My philosophy is do it when you're going to have company over, or if you're going to a potluck, so that you get more people's opinion on it."

"If it's wonderful, great, you've exposed them to something new," she said. "If it's awful, oh well, they'll help you eat it."

CHIP CHOCOLATE CAKE

1/2 cup shortening
1 1/2 cup sugar
2 eggs
2 cups applesauce
2 cups flour
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon salt
3 3/4 tablespoons cocoa
1 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 cups chocolate chips
1/2 cup chopped pecans (optional)
1 cup powdered sugar
3 tablespoons milk

1. Heat oven to 350 degrees.
2. Cream sugar and shortening together on high speed for 2 minutes.
3. Add eggs and applesauce. Mix.
4. Sift together flour, cinnamon, salt, cocoa and baking soda. Combine with shortening mixture. 5. Spread into a lightly greased and floured 9"X13" cake pan.
6. Sprinkle granulated sugar, chocolate chips and nuts over the top.
7. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes.
8. Combine powdered sugar and milk to form a glaze.
9. Drizzle over cake immediately after removing cake from the oven.

Student Senate has just enough turnout to vote on bills

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate barely made quorum with only 32 senators present at the beginning of its Thursday evening meeting. This blocked a vote on an amendment to the Student Governing Association constitution — the vote required a nod from two-thirds of all voting members, not just those present.

The amendment, which clarified a part of the constitution related to college councils, had to be sent back to the committee until after spring break.

An allocation was denied to the Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts after several rounds of debates on the pros and cons. The group requested $2,700 to bring a guest speaker to Manhattan High School.

Senator Bryan Cox debated on the negative in regards to the allocation. He said he would rather not see students' money go to something that might or might not be successful.

"This event, first of all, is held off campus," said Cox, junior in political science. "We don't know that it's going to have a great impact. I do not think that it is a wise use of our funds."

Cox said there is no available space on campus during the group's preferred night because of already-scheduled events.

The allocation failed with a vote of 6-36-0.

Two of the items on final action that passed unanimously altered the wording of bylaws and statutes. Another item increased student privilege fees in order to maintain the collegiate readership program, which provides the distribution of four prominent and area newspapers across campus.

The program was previously paid for by Student-Centered Tuition Enhancements.

Senator Clint Blaes, senior in agriculture communications and journalism, said the Office of Student Activities and Services is taking care of the cost so the tuition enhancements can help to start other new programs.

In two weeks, Senators will vote on a resolution to support a city-wide smoking ban. If passed, the legislation will encourage city officials to pass legislation banning smoking in any public place, including bars.

Vicki Nibarger came to speak in favor of the bill and told Senate to pass the resolution after spring break.

"Everyone deserves the right to breathe clean air," said Nibarger, Kansas Grassroots Advocacy manager for the American Cancer Society.

She said banning smoking has proven to have a neutral or positive effect on businesses in 27 other Kansas locations that have a smoking ban in place.

FRIDAY FACTOID

Grounds workers busy during break

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How long have students worked on the grounds crew at K-State?

Warmer weather is finally making an appearance in Manhattan, and the change in season brings more work for student employees who work on campus grounds through the Division of Facilities.

According to Joe Myers, supervisor of grounds and maintenance, spring is a busy time for students on the campus grounds crew.

"Early spring is dedicated to tasks like tree and shrub pruning, shrub and flowerbed preparation, pre-emergent weed treatments and general cleanup of the winter grunge," Myers said. "Open house in April and graduation in May are our guidelines. We have campus cleaned up by open house and flowerbeds planted by graduation."

High-traffic areas like Higginbotham Gate, Durland Plaza and the Alumni Center are replanted seasonally, Myers said. Some of the flora planted by the grounds crew is grown on campus.

"The grounds department has a greenhouse in the Throckmorton complex, and we try to grow 50-60 percent of our flowers," said Myers.

COURTESY PHOTO

Students have worked on the facilities crew for more than a decade.

"We also work with the horticulture department, and the spring bedding plant production class is nice enough to produce some material for us."

Myers said there are currently more than 20 students employed on the grounds crew. Each crew member works more than 12 hours every week, with more hours worked per week in the summer. However, there was a time when a larger number of students worked daily on the K-State grounds.

In the late nineteenth century, each male student was required to do horticulture or farm work on campus, according to a June 1953 article in the Alumni Association's K-Stater magazine. Female students were required to work for the university by cooking, working at the dairy, sewing or operating telegraphs.

The college catalog listed the mandatory employment as farm and garden industrial work. Each student was expected to complete five hours of work each week during the afternoons; the young men who did this industrial work became known as "p.m. boys." The p.m. boys could be spotted around campus and in fields with shovels and pitchforks.

The industrial work was compulsory from 1873 to 1897 under the administrations of K-State Presidents John Anderson and George Fairchild. More than a century later, K-State students are still involved in the upkeep and beautification of the campus grounds.

The 'Ville to celebrate real St. Patty's Day

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anyone left wanting more from the Fake Patrick's Day celebration last weekend can continue the green tradition Saturday in Aggieville.

Aggieville's 30th annual St. Patrick's Day Celebration's theme is 'Go Green', and it begins at 7:30 a.m. with a Blarney Breakfast at Kite's Grille and Bar. Events continue throughout the day with races, an egg hunt and a parade.

The morning's breakfast is a fundraiser for the Manhattan Arts Center, said Tess Purvis, the center's director of marketing and education.

"It's a really good time, and it's a cheap breakfast for a good cause," she said.

Purvis said the MAC has done the green eggs, ham, biscuits and fruit breakfast for eight years.

Tickets can be purchased in advance at the Arts Center until 5 p.m. today. They are $7 for adults and $5 for children 12 and under. Tickets bought at the door are a dollar more.

The breakfast is sponsored by Deloris and Steven Berland, members of the MAC.

Later in the day, Dr. Seuss' Green EGGstravaganza will take place at 10:15 a.m. on the front lawn of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Union Program Council is sponsoring the event for children of all ages to honor Dr. Seuss' birthday, which was March 2, said Jessica Pope, senior in hotel and restaurant management.

"Normally, it's at the Bosco Student Plaza, and from there to Hale Library," Pope said, "but because Aggieville's St. Patrick's Day celebration is the same day, we wanted to work with them. That way people can enjoy both activities."

Pope, a UPC co-chair for the event, said there will be several activities available.

Children will be divided into age categories for the hunt and can participate in stuff-the-bear, sandy candy and jelly bean guessing contest activities.

Celebrations will continue with a parade at 11 a.m., a 2-mile fun walk/run at 12:30 p.m. and a 10K road race at 1:15 p.m.

the supply of water to a fire main in the area. The new line will also increase water pressure and clarity and improve safety conditions for residents.

"We don't expect any surprises," Armesto said. "It seems like it should be clear-cut; it should proceed fine. We're actually hoping that we'll have it done before the 31st, if the weather permits."

Though closing a street will pose some level of inconvenience for city residents, Mayor Tom Phillips said the benefits of this project will be worth the possible week of drivers having to use detours.

"The closing of any street is always a point of concern to me," he said. "I'm sure it will have an adverse impact on the people who travel that route and they'll just have to make the necessary adjustment. Changing that water line is a worthwhile project."

for you, I am not here to entertain you," Anthony said. "I am here to worship with you."

The interactive audience continued their praise as they joined Anthony in songs from his CD. He spoke about personal struggles he has overcome throughout his life.

"I don't want anyone to think that I have it all together and that I don't need the blood of Christ as much as everyone else," Anthony said.

Tony was welcomed with a standing ovation as he walked toward the stage and began to explain his connection with K-State. Tony's brother received his doctorate at K-State, and his son played football for one of K-State's Big 12 Conference foes, Baylor.

Tony said he wanted to challenge people to live a life of purpose while he was in Manhattan.

"Anytime I can talk to students who are getting ready to make their transition from school to career, I want to try to make sure I can influence them, especially from a spiritual perspective," Tony said. "There are a lot of distractions, so I want to implant something that will make their lives better. Then it makes it exciting - so I'm excited to come here."

Many students said they left the event feeling encouraged and motivated.

sage," Rhone said. "You can make a decision today to accept Christ and live as a reflection of God's image in everyday life - instead of living purposely, you can live with a purpose."

One student said the message was eye-opening.

"It was heavy motivation for me to have a purpose in life," said Curtis Weathersby, junior in human ecology. "It gave me encouragement to stay in school - it gave purpose to my major."

St. Patrick's Day Guide

Fake Paddy's day is over, but you can still enjoy the real deal with our helpful guide.

eat,

Blarney Breakfast

Eat a hearty breakfast and help raise money for the Manhattan Arts Center at Kite's Blarney Breakfast, beginning at 7:30 Saturday morning. Tickets are $8 at the door.

Irish Soda Bread

Stop by Panera Bread to pick up a loaf of Irish soda bread baked with currants or hot cross buns. Panera sells the Irish treats through the month of March.

'Traditional' Irish cooking

Most people have misconceptions about what constitutes traditional Irish food. Almost everyone — when asked about Irish food — mentions corned beef and cabbage. And almost every visitor to Ireland is surprised to find that it's not commonly featured on restaurant menus. In fact corned beef is not traditionally Irish at all — bacon and cabbage is.

Most traditional Irish foods use simple, basic and cheap ingredients, a reminder of the fact that they originated in a less affluent past. Many have been given a modern twist by a new generation of chefs or incorporated into dishes that better suit the tastes of a more widely traveled population.

Also, there is a tendency to take any recipe at random, add a dollop of whiskey and then append the word Irish in front of its name. The truth is that whiskey is not used much in traditional Irish recipes. The Irish always prefer to drink whiskey rather than cook with it.

Irish Stew

Many Irish people credit their health to regular helpings of this tasty dish.

Ingredients:

1lb stewing lamb, cubed
1lb carrots, sliced
1lb onions, cut into wedges
1lb potatoes, peeled and quartered
1/2 lb parsnips, thickly sliced salt and pepper
pinch of thyme

Mix all ingredients into a large saucepan, slowly bring to a boil and simmer for 1 hour.

drink,

Belfast Bombers

Stop by O'Malley's Alley for a Belfast Bomber, a delicious mix of Guinness, Irish cream and Jameson Whiskey. Other bars will also have green beer and other specials throughout the day.

Guinness

Arthur Guinness began brewing stout 246 years ago in Dublin. It has since become Ireland's largest export, selling more than 2 million pints per year. According to the Guinness Web site, Guinness Draught is best served at 43 degrees with the legendary two-part pour. First, tilt the glass to 45 degrees and carefully pour until three quarters full. Then place the glass on the bar counter and leave to settle. Once the surge has settled, fill the glass to the brim. It takes about 119.5 seconds to pour the perfect pint. But don't fret. It's worth the wait.

Other beers

Guinness might be the most popular, but Ireland has a large variety of great beers. Try Harp Lager, Smithwick's, Murphy's, Kilkeny and any other Irish beer you can get your hands on.

Irish Coffee

Start the morning off right with a beverage that contains caffeine and alcohol. Combine a shot of Irish whiskey, a cup of strong black coffee and 2-4 tablespoons of whipped cream. It's perfect for cold weather and nasty hangovers.

Black Velvet

This beverage can be made by combining 1 pint of stout and 1 pint of champagne. Stir well and pour into a pre-chilled glass.

Hot Whiskey

This simple concoction is so powerful that it can actually cure a broken heart. If that doesn't work, take ten more in quick succession. Combine 1 shot of Irish whiskey, 1 slice of lemon, 4 cloves, 1 teaspoon of sugar and 2 shots of boiled water.

be merry

Dr. Seuss' Green EGGstravaganza!

Hunt for green eggs at the Beach Museum of Art lawn to celebrate Dr. Seuss' birthday, St. Patrick's Day and Easter, all at the same time. Check-in from 9:30-10 a.m. Saturday. The hunt begins at 10:15.

30th annual St. Patrick's Day Parade

The parade through Aggieville begins at 11 a.m. Saturday. This year's theme is "Go Green."

St. Patrick's Day Road Races

Last year's race featured 1,070 participants and 500 Fort Riley soldiers running in the race while stationed in Tikrit, Iraq. The 2-mile Fun Run and walk begin at 12:30 followed by the 10k Road Race at 1:15. Registration for the races begins 9:30 a.m. Saturday at Ballard's Sporting Goods. Registration is $15 for walkers and $20 for runners. A portion of the proceeds will go to the Special Olympics.

35th annual Kansas City St. Patrick's Day celebration

Kansas City's St. Patrick's Day had humble beginnings. The 1973 parade only featured a painted green calf and was billed "the shortest and worst" parade in history, according to the parade Web site. More than 500,000 people watched it in 2005, making it one of the biggest St. Patrick's Day parades in the country.

The parade begins at 11 a.m. Monday at the corner of Pershing Road and Main Street. It heads East on Pershing to Grand and continues north to Truman Road. This year's theme is "Growing Up Irish" and the Grand Marshall is Danny O'Neill.

Athletics

If parades don't pique your interest, try playing some popular Irish sports. The Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA) promotes hurling (equipment pictured below), Gaelic football, handball, rounders and Irish dance. Until 1971, members of the GAA were prohibited from playing non-GAA sports or even attending those sports events as spectators.

GET LUCKY

Impress your friends and members of the opposite sex by speaking in Irish slang during the holiday. These terms come from "The Feckin' Book of Everything Irish," by Colin Murphy and Donal O'Dea.

IRISH WANNABEES

Everyone is Irish on St. Patrick's Day, but these brands and people fake it year round.

■ Lucky Charms

General Mills, a company based in Minnesota, created this cereal in 1963 by mixing Cheerios with Kraft Circus Peanuts. The mascot, Lucky the Leprechaun, was briefly replaced in 1975 by Waldo the Wizard. Although Waldo performed better in focus-group testing, Lucky returned after less than a year.

■ Irish Spring

The popular deodorant soap was created in 1972 by Colgate-Palmolive, a company based in New York City. Early television advertisements for the soap were set in an Irish village.

■ The Fighting Irish

Notre Dame's nickname refers to Irish immigrant soldiers who fought in the Civil War with the Union's Irish Brigade. Notre Dame's claim to the nickname is justified since its third president was a famous Irish Brigade chaplain whose ministrations at Gettysburg are commemorated in the painting "Absolution Under Fire," part of Notre Dame's permanent art collection.

■ The Dropkick Murphys, Flogging Molly

These bands certainly have Celtic influences, but neither are actually Irish. The Dropkick Murphys come from Boston and Flogging Molly started in Los Angeles. For genuine Irish tunes check out The Saw Doctors, The Pogues, Van Morrison, or if you're desperate, U2.

IRISH CINEMA

Some of these films were made in Ireland, others just have Irish themes and characters. Either way, they provide a great opportunity for docile people to celebrate the holiday.

"Once" (2006)

This independent Irish film won this year's Academy Award for best original song. The Frame's Glen Hansard plays a street musician in Dublin who teams up with an immigrant to make a demo and sort out his romantic issues.

"The Boondock Saints" (1999)

Two brothers decide to purge Boston of evil in this independent action film. Tarantino fans will love the disjointed story structure and gratuitous violence. Hardcore fans should check out the making-of documentary, "Overnight."

"The Quiet Man" (1952)

John Wayne plays a disgraced American boxer who retires to Ireland, where he finds love. If John Wayne's name isn't reason enough to watch a movie, it's one of the few Hollywood movies that features spoken Gaelic.

"The Commitments" (1991)

Based on the book by Roddy Doyle, the film shows a man's struggle to form the "world's hardest working band." The Commitments, and bring soul music to the people of Dublin. It's a funny film with a great soundtrack.

"Leprechaun" (1993)

As horror movies go, "Leprechaun" is far from good, but watching a young Jennifer Aniston run away from an angry mythological creature is worth the small rental fee. If you like it, you're in luck. There are four more sequels to check out.
